PARLIAMENT OF NEW SOUTH WALES.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 6.

The SPEAKER took the chair at half-past 4 o'clock.

THE SALVATION ARMY AT WOLLONGONG.

Mr MELVILLE said he desired to call the attention of the Minister for Justice to the fact that since he last called attention to the matter, some other members of the Salvation Army at Wollongong had been sent to gaol. He wished to know if the Minister intended to take steps to release these people. The matter had been carried too far.

Mr. W. CLARKE said he had that day ordered the release of the salvationists, upon the assurance having been given him that the processions would cease until the validity of the bylaw had been tested.

ELECTIONS AND QUALIFICATIONS COMMITTEE.

Mr. SPEAKER announced that, as there had been no objection to the names of the hon. members nominated for the Elections and Qualifications Committee, the committee was therefore appointed, and he asked the members of the committee to come to the table and be sworn.

QUESTIONS.

Mr. INGLIS, in reply to Mr. F. Farnell for Mr. Crouch, said proceedings had been taken at the Casino police court against persons for neglecting to send their children to school. The Schools Attendance Officer conducted the prosecutions, and the teachers of the schools at Casino, Runnymede, Tatham, and Tomki attended to give evidence. There were three convictions, and in six cases the charges were withdrawn

Mr. BURNS, in reply to Mr. Walker for Mr. Ryrie, said that the premises at present occupied by the Stamp Department did not afford sufficient accommodation, and it was his intention to obtain more commodious premises.

Mr. W. CLARKE, in reply to Mr. Walker, said he had been informed that the Attorney-General had requested Mr. Muir, the police magistrate at Newcastle, to apprise the accused in the riot at Maitland, in which case the jury returned a verdict of not guilty, that he did not intend to proceed farther against them on the charge of conspiracy.

Mr. BURNS, in reply to Mr. Wall, said it was not the present intention of the Government to authorise a continuance of the survey of the Colo Valley railway line to its convergence with the Great Western Railway.

Mr. BRUNKER, in reply to Mr. Dangar, said complaint had been made as to fencing of a portion of the travelling stock reserve No. 1239. Application for improvement purchase was made by Mr. Wills Allen, but was refused. Mr. Wills Allen had been called upon to remove the obstructing fences, and warned that if such removal was not effected proceedings would be instituted.

Mr. INGLIS, in reply to Mr. Walker for Mr. J. P. Abbott, said that The Elms at Bathurst had been leased by the Department of Public Instruction for a ladies' school for five years from the 1st January, 1889, at £260 per annum. Twenty-seven young ladies were now attending the school. There were three teachers, whose salaries were:—Principal, £252; assistant, £50; sewing mistress, £18. From the 1st January to the 30th September last the fees amounted to £136 10s. The admission of pupils to the school could only be granted upon the applicant's proving that they possessed the standard of attainments set out in the regulations. An advertisement had been published in reference to admissions, but the head mistress was not authorised to say that scholars "lately attending" The Elms would be admitted without passing the usual entrance examination.

Mr. BURNS, in reply to Mr. F. Farnell for Mr. Seaver, said there was no special law by which timber waggons and trollies could be prevented from being used on public roads with insufficient width of tire, but persons so offending could be prosecuted under the clause of the Police Act providing against injury to public works, or under the common law as a nuisance.

PAPERS.

The following papers were laid upon the table:—The report of the trustees of the National Park for the year ended 31st December, 1887; additional bylaws adopted at a meeting of the Senate on Monday, the 17th September: recommendation, &c., re the electric lighting of Parliamentary buildings; amended regulations as to training, examination, and classification of teachers; resumption of land in the town of Yass, required in connection with the proposed extension of the gaol; bylaws prepared in accordance with the provisions of the Metropolitan Water and Sewerage Act; statement showing (approximately) the area of land sold annually, together with the amount received for the same, from 1st January, 1884, to 30th September, 1888; correspondence in connection with certain remarks alleged to have been made in Parliament by Mr. R. H. Levien respecting Mr. District Court Judge Docker; report of the Standing orders Committee.

It was ordered that the papers be printed.

A PETITION.

Mr. GARRARD presented a petition from Balmain in [favour] of the Local License Veto Bill.

[The] petition was received.

REVENUE RETURNS.

Mr. BURNS said that in pursuance of a promise he made on a previous occasion, he would lay on the table a comparative statement of the revenue for the month of October. The returns for October showed increases under nearly all the heads of revenue as compared with the returns for the corresponding month of 1887. The increases were in round numbers, in Customs, £6300; stamp and succession duties, £11,400; licenses, £540; railway, £41,800; land revenue, £10,300; postal services, £3900; telegraphic services, £4800; pilotage rates and harbour dues, £720; public school fees, £560; fees of office, £730. The total receipts for the month amounted to £715,741 8s. 2d., as against £629,183 7s. 9d. for October, 1887, being an increase for October 1888 of £86,558. He would move the return be printed.

Mr. J. P. ABBOTT said he would like to call attention to the extreme smartness of the Treasurer when he had anything to show an improvement of the department under his management. How was it the same smartness was not exhibited in issuing the quarterly returns, which were always behind the other colonies. The Treasurer had also adopted the unusual course of reading a document and then moving that it be printed. At the end of the session they would be told that there had been gross waste of time.

Mr. MELVILLE said that it would have been more creditable to the Treasurer had he read the decreases as well as the increases. Under excise there had been a decrease of £500.

Mr. O'SULLIVAN said he hoped that the figures given by the Treasurer were more reliable than the figures he gave the other night in reference to the industries of the colony.

The motion was agreed to.

THE POLICE AND THE RIOTERS.

Mr. MELVILLE said he desired to call the attention of the Colonial Secretary to a matter upon which he was prepared to give names and information. The case was that of a sergeant and 18 policemen having gone to the house of a woman at 3 o'clock in the morning and knocked her up under the pretence of looking for her son, who was alleged to be one of the so-called Wallsend rioters. It was scandalous that a woman should be compelled to get up at that time in the morning and in her night-dress stand and hold a candle while her home was being searched.

Sir HENRY PARKES said he would cause immediate and careful inquiry to be made in the alleged circumstances.

THE TRAMWAY FRAUDS.

Mr. A. ALLEN said he desired to ask the Colonial Treasurer if he would lay upon the table the papers relating to the tram frauds, and the recommendations of the commission appointed to investigate the matter.

Mr. BURNS said he would do so if the papers were complete.

ALLEGED ILLEGAL REMOVAL OF TIMBER.

Mr. BRUNKER laid upon the table a return of copies of letters and documents sent by Mr. William Croaker, J.P., to the Secretary for Mines, re the illegal removal of timber from Crown lands in the vicinity of Clarence Town, on the Williams River; and copies of all letters and correspondence from the Forest Ranger; also, copies of all letters from the Secretary for Mines on the same subject. He moved that the document be printed.

Mr. WISE said he would like to know if it was necessary to print papers of such bulk? The waste of public money in printing was incredible. He asked the Minister whether these papers were of sufficient importance to be printed?

Mr. ABBOTT said that if they printed votes of proceedings, in reference to which he had moved that the printing be dispensed with, he could not see how they could refuse to print the papers now laid upon the table, to which great interest might attach. Seven or eight tenths of the papers printed were for the information of constituencies. Hon. members did not as a rule look at the papers.

Sir HENRY PARKES said that he was surprised at the remarks of the hon. member for Wentworth in reference to the papers now laid on the table, and the votes of proceedings. Votes of proceedings were of historical and abiding interest. At a future time they would be of great value to the historical student. Unquestionably there had been great waste of public money in printing papers which, perhaps, only two or three individuals would read. Many years ago he called attention to the way in which they managed these matters in the United States. There they published papers relating to the country—its resources, and capabilities, written by men of ability. Twenty years ago he tried to direct the exercise of our printing office in the same way, and if this were done it would tend to the use of the expenditure in promoting the real development [of] the country's resources. It would be wise if they could [do some]thing about reports of such a character, and print less of [the] documents now proposed.

Mr. GARVAN said there would be danger in refusing to print documents laid upon the table of the House.

Sir HENRY PARKES said there could be no danger because if it became apparent—after the document was laid upon the table that it should be printed there could be no objection to it.

Mr. CREER said he trusted that the House would consent to print the papers in question, as they would be found of great public interest. The information referred to the illegal removal, the theft, of timber belonging to the Crown.

Mr. BRUNKER said that when he saw the papers in question, the cost of printing struck him at once, but upon examining them he found they had been ordered by a vote of the Assembly. Therefore he thought it his duty to produce them, and to take the ordinary course to have them printed. If he had found that they should not be printed, he might have made some remarks to that effect, but as they referred to a matter of large public interest, showing the vast amount of manipulation that was going on with regard to public matters in the country, he thought they should be printed. At a glance, he thought the document was of great importance so far as the private business of hon. members was concerned, and so far as the public interest was concerned they were also of great value.

The motion was agreed to.

THE CENTENNIAL PARK.

Mr. NEILD, without notice, asked the hon. the Premier if his attention had been directed to the vast accumulation of rubbish in the Centennial Park, and the nuisance it was causing to residents in the neighbourhood.

Sir HENRY PARKES replied that his attention had been directed to the circumstance, and he did not think it a nuisance of a formidable character. It was almost impossible to carry out the necessary work without causing some inconvenience, and he considered that it might be borne for a few days for the sake of the improvements connected with the park. He would visit the park when time availed, and make further investigation of the matter.

HARGRAVES AND AVISFORD COMMON.

Mr. WALL moved,—"That there be laid upon the table of this House copies of all letters, papers, petitions, reports, applications, and other documents received by the Lands and the Mines Departments in connection with the sale or lease of portions of the Hargraves and the Avisford Commons."

The motion was agreed to.

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT—SALES OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. GARVAN moved the adjournment of the House to call attention to the practice of selling large areas of public lands by auction. He was induced to take the step in consequence of a letter of the Premier, which had appeared in the Herald on Monday, under the heading of "The Premier and the Lands Department." The first letter was addressed by Sir Henry Parkes to Mr. Oliver, late Under Secretary at the Lands Office. In that communication it was conveyed more distinctly than the mere wording itself that he (Mr. Garvan) had made a statement which was absolutely incorrect, not technically, but in a matter of detail. He had not made use of the statement that the Premier was in charge of the department for "three" short weeks, although he was reported so in Hansard. What he said was a "few" short weeks. In Hansard the context would show that that was meant.

Mr. SPEAKER pointed out that the hon. member was not in order in quoting from the record of a previous debate in the same session.

Mr. GARVAN: The Premier had stated that he was in charge of the department for six weeks. As a matter of fact, he had charge of it from before July 18 until September 7. Mr. Oliver, who had presumed to deny the accuracy of his (Mr. Garvan's) statement, admitted that the Premier's name was attached to the authorisation to sell 199,465 acres. From a careful calculation which had been made by a gentleman of unimpeachable integrity, he was assured that the total was actually over 200,000 acres. His original statement was therefore accurate, for, as a matter of fact, the amount authorised to be sold by the Premier had exceeded the amount permitted by law to be sold in one year. In 1882, when Sir Henry Parkes was in office, £1,172,000 was derived from the sale of public lands, but the feeling against this alienation of land was so strong throughout the country that when the Stuart Government came into office a stop was put to the practice, and the amount derived from that source was very considerably reduced. In 1886, for instance, it was only £111,000. In 1887 these sales effected a considerable swelling of revenue, for the amount reached £172,000, or upwards of £60,000 more than for the previous year. It was hoped this year to receive £376,000. Not one shilling derived from the sales of public lands should go into the Treasury to defray the expenses of Government. At Hornsby and Gordon land which had been greatly improved in value by the railway passing near the property was to be forced into the market. That land would pass into the hands of speculators, and probably not 5 per cent., not even 1 per cent., would be purchased for the purposes of legitimate settlement. He protested against the Premier leaving the Chamber just as he was about to speak on this matter, and remaining absent during the whole of the time. (Attention was called to the state of the House and a quorum was formed.) There was undue haste to rush this land into the market. The necessities of settlement did not demand it. In 10 or 20 years hence the land might be required for settlement, and it would then be very valuable. Syndicates had put pressure on the Government to sell it, and some of the Ministers themselves were great landowners. Land had lately been cleared by the unemployed on the private property of Ministers and their supporters. The Government stated that the owners gave the portion necessary for roads, but these roads were necessary, because the land was to be cut up into small allotments. It was a disgrace to spend the public money in this manner. Large sales of land were distinctly contrary to the law now in existence, which was intended effectually to put a stop to them. The limitation was intended to apply to £200,000 as the extreme being received in one year; but this year, the Government had raised the amount to £376,000, and the whole of the proceeds were to be used to carry on the ordinary work of the Government. The State could afford to wait better than the directors of land syndicates, but this would not suit the balance-sheet that was to be presented to the House. If the directors of a private company were to do as the Government were doing, they would be charged with fraud. In previous Administrations, Sir Henry Parkes had followed the same practice, but he thought that this kind of thing should be put a stop to.

Mr. GORMLY contended that the question was an important one. He was one of the first to call attention to it. A large quantity of land had been sold at Hay, but there was no bidding for it, and it was bought by the lessee of the runs at the upset price. In the Riverina, the Government had sold the land along which the proposed canal to the Lake Urana was to run. A large quantity of suburban land had also been put up at the upset price of £100 per acre, and he contended that when it was so valuable it was not fair that the Government should sell the full limit in the year. It was no good trying to sell land by auction when there was no competition for it. It was absurd to force an article on the market when it was not required. He thought that some explanation should be given on the matter.

Mr. WADDELL said he could not see that the Government had done wrong in this matter. The Land Act of 1884 provided that the Government of the day would have the right to sell 200,000 acres of land; but the hon. member for Eden argued that the intention of Parliament was not to allow the Government to sell more than £200,000 worth of land. If that were the intention, why did not Parliament say so? It appeared to him that if we wanted the country to go ahead, the lands should be allowed to go into the hands of the people. The great object of selling lands by auction was to prevent their going into large estates, as aggregation was the result of private sale. A progressive land tax would prevent the lands going into the hands of the capitalist.

Mr. O'SULLIVAN stated that some 417 persons in this colony own nearly nineteen million acres of land. If the land were sold by auction, it would necessarily pass into the hands of those who had the biggest purses. The hon. member who spoke last was a pastoralist, and represented the views of the pastoralists. The intention of Parliament was that not more than 200,000 acres of land, at a reserve price of £1 per acre, should be sold by auction in one year. With regard to the land improved by the "unemployed," he hoped there would be some inquiry made into the statement that the public funds had been utilised by paying the so-called "unemployed" to improve the property of a Minister of the Crown.

Mr. BARBOUR said he found by the Government Gazette in the beginning of October, that there were 148 different places throughout the country at which lands were advertised for sale by auction. Towards the end of October Mr. Brunker reduced the number to 101, and he (Mr. Barbour) hoped that the hon. gentleman would go on reducing the number till there were very few places indeed at which land would be sold by auction. There could be no doubt that the country was opposed to the sale of the land by auction. In Queensland the largest amount that could be sold by auction was 40 acres. The system in this colony had been in favour of the aggregation of large estates. While we had been encouraging that large system of alienating the public estate, we had been neglecting altogether the smaller man—we had been neglecting altogether the bone and sinew of the country. When they pressed the Minister to cancel those reserves, and throw them open to settlement, they could not get that done. Thousands of people in his electorate would take up land to-morrow, but they could not get it or it was doled out to them. In some cases the cancellation of reserves had been made almost simultaneously with the gazetting of them for sale by public auction, the object being to enable the squatter to obtain them. That showed the kind of system that pervaded the Lands Department. He hoped the new Minister for Lands would look into the affairs of his office, and try to encourage the settlement upon the lands of the smaller men. The more people they settled upon the land the greater would be the prosperity of the country. Settlement was preferable to a very high price for the lands. In Victoria the settlement of the country was the object sought to be attained, rather than procuring a high price for the land. We tried to encourage and cultivate and play into the hands of the monopolist, and at the same time to drive away the bona-fide man who would ultimately be the bone and sinew of the country. The difference of the two systems which prevailed in Victoria and this colony was shown in that part of the country which he represented. If one looked on the Victorian side of the boundary, he would see six or seven farms, whilst if one galloped 50 miles on New South Wales territory he would scarcely see a single hut.

Mr. SEAVER considered that the Government were perfectly justified in selling the land to which reference had been made. He felt it was their duty to bring in a measure to impose a tax upon the unimproved value of land, and he believed this Government intended to do that. If he thought the Government did not intend to impose a tax upon the unimproved value of land, he would become one of their bitterest opponents.

Mr. DOWEL considered that the action of the Minister, in stopping the sale by auction of certain lands which had been advertised for sale in the district of Wellingrove, was thoroughly justifiable, as it prevented a town from being swept out of existence by neighbouring land being swept up by a certain lessee of Crown lands.

Mr. WALL thought that with respect to Crown lands in the suburbs that might be offered for sale by auction, it would be desirable to submit them in quarter or half acre allotments. He was also of opinion that a 160-acre block was not sufficient for a man to make a living upon in the Western district. The law required amending in respect to matters of that kind.

Mr. WALKER said it seemed to him that the Premier had been trying to get from a subordinate something on which he might base an attack upon the Opposition. He was surprised to hear the speeches made in defence of the Government. The worst possible policy the Government could adopt was that of the alienation of the public land. It was with that object, and the object also of preventing more land being sold than 200 acres bringing £1 an acre, that the bill of 1884 made that limitation to the sale of land. [Mr. BRUNKER: Nonsense.] It had two objects—one to prevent the wholesale alienation of public estates, and the other that of compelling the Government to raise its money by legitimate taxation. If every Government were to sell the best parts of the remaining land nothing would be left to fall back upon; the debt of the country would be enormously increased, and taxation more difficult to bear than under present circumstances. The lands of the country were sold, alienated for no other purpose than to enable the Colonial Treasurer to tell the House that this colony was in advance of Victoria and gloriously flourishing. The free-trade policy meant the alienation of the public estates by a few persons, and the total extinction of the free selector and small landed proprietor. He submitted that it was wrong to sell the lands of the country to raise revenue to stave off taxation, and it only tended to assuming a fictitious prosperity when, as a matter of fact, the colony was absolutely going to ruin. The Government should have in view the future of the country as well as the present. He was a disciple of Henry George in the ultimate nationalisation of the land.

Mr. HAYNES said that protection in the United States had resulted in the aggregation of larger estates than there were in England. He would resist the selling of the land around about the Centennial Park. He would guarantee that a land tax was in force three years from date. Next session at least a Land Tax Bill would have to be introduced.

Mr. CARRUTHERS said that in 1886 Sir Patrick Jennings had stated in the House, that owing to the bad times not more than one-fourth of the land offered for sale by the then Administration was purchased. Now, however, under the present Government land would be sold in far larger proportion, and a better price could be obtained. This colony had 160,000,000 acres of unalienated land, and only 50,000,000 acres had been alienated. Selling at the rate of 200,000 acres a year would still leave a very large area before the century was reached. They were building permanent public works, in whose advantages posterity would share, and it was an unwise thing to keep a large extent of land locked up, while the present generation was taxed to construct and maintain these works.

Mr. MELVILLE objected to any wholesale alienation of the public lands. When general individuals cut up estates, they were compelled to form the streets before a council would take them over. The owners should have paid for the metalling, as they owned the land on each side of the streets. The sale of land in this colony had created the germs of an aristocracy which, in after years, we should find it difficult to get rid of.

Mr. HAYNES: Tax it.

Mr. MELVILLE said that the Government would pawn, give, or sell that which belonged to the people, so long as they could keep in office.

Mr. J. P. ABBOTT said that his opinion regarding the sale of public land was not formed in a day. There was no doubt that the law meant that 200,000 acres of land should be sold in a year, and not that £200,000 should be received for it. He advocated a system by which the proceeds of land sales should be carried to a sinking fund to meet our national debt. The loan debt of the colony was now about £45,000,000, and one loan was paid when it matured by floating another one. If the land were applied to the extinction of our national debt he would not care how much was sold. The worst was that the sale of this land in the past had created extravagance. Had it not been for these sales the public money would not have been spent in the way it had. Public buildings in the country were far in advance of the requirements of the time. The money came easily and was spent easily. When the railways were opened was not the time to sell land, but a short time before they were opened. It was found when the railway had been made that the land had obtained a fictitious value—one which it would not have for years. So long as people could be found to give £200 per acre, as was the case near Hornsby lately, let the Government sell. If the land were alienated it remained to be taxed. In no new country in the world had land nationalisation been a success, although it was a pretty theory to hold out to unthinking people. If a man felt that land was his own, there was an inducement for him to make the most of it. He would destroy every one of the 99-year leases existing in Sydney, and give the owners the right to purchase their leases at the present valuation. What would it matter if the land did fall into the hands of syndicates? They could not afford to hold it. They cut it up and divided it amongst the people. In England estates were settled upon the heir, generation after generation; but in France there was a different system, and a man was compelled to divide it amongst his children. He did not regret altogether that these 200,000 acres were available for sale every year, but he would very much regret it if the Minister for Lands were to throw open the reserves on the resumed areas and allow them to go to auction. He would rather see them as they were now. He hoped to see in the next land bill a provision prohibiting the selectors from taking up land a second time. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. NEILD said he rose simply to protest against the consumption of private members' night by a discussion which should properly take place on the financial statement. (Hear, hear.)

Sir HENRY PARKES said he must confess that he was at a loss to know why this debate was introduced at all. Certainly the slender peg it was held upon did not justify such a course. On the first night they met it appeared to him that a most disingenuous attempt had been made to hold him up as a promoter of auction sales. He did not, however, care about taking up the time of the House then by making any explanation, and took what he thought was the best course. He wrote to the able man at the head of the Lands Department (Mr. Oliver) and ascertained whether his recollection was correct—that he never took any action whatever in promoting auction sales of land. When he received a reply from Mr. Oliver he published the correspondence. He did not consider the matter of sufficient importance to drag it before the Assembly. During the discussion the old form of abuse had been resorted to of fixing upon the Government the desire to alienate the public estate, because, said these traducers, the former Parkes Government did something or another. How could this Government be responsible for what a Government did of which he was a member some time ago? He would show whether the Parkes Government, which existed from the end of 1878 to the beginning of 1883 were promoters in any marked manner of these auction sales. Notoriously they were not. They did nothing whatever to stimulate the alienation of the public estate by public auction. The system had existed from the very outset of responsible Government, and long before. When responsible Government was introduced, no attempt whatever was made to stop this alienation, and Government after Government followed this system out, and theoretically the system was the fairest in the world. He had taken the trouble to look up the records while the debate was going on, to see how the lands were alienated in the past, and if they were to judge rightly of the significance of the figures under this system they must be taken in connexion with the increase of the population. Land, he presumed, could only be sold on any ground of justification to supply the wants of the population, and if this was admitted it was natural that the policy of increasing the area of land disposed of should keep pace with settlement. The Parkes Administration, to which reference had been made, came into office during the last days of 1878, and remained in office through 1879, 1880-1-2—that was through four complete years and a few days of the preceding year and the succeeding year. The population of course steadily increased during these four years. Let them now see by the records whether this charge against the Government was so well founded that it could be justified in being repeated once. In 1875 the amount taken for the sale of public lands by auction was £1,919,052, in 1876 £1,548,888, in 1877 it was £1,967,057. During these three years he knew Sir Alexander Stuart was in office as Colonial Treasurer for a considerable time. In 1878, when Mr. Farnell and Mr. Fitzpatrick were in office, the sales by auction were £1,061,670—a decline of nearly £900,000. In 1879, the first year in which he was in office, the sales by auction fell to £698,000, or less than half what they stood at in 1887, though the population had increased by 100,000. In 1880—the second year in which he was in office—the sales of land by public auction declined to £437,964—a little more than a quarter of what they were in 1877. (Hear, hear.) In 1881 the amount of auction sales was £566,404. Now he was interrupted, and did not get the figures for the other year—that was the last year of his being in office—but he had quoted sufficient to show how utterly unsupported by facts—how utterly wild—was the accusation that the present Government stimulated the sale of public lands by public auction. So far from their having stimulated the sales of Crown lands by public auction they had under the management of the present Government largely and visibly declined, so that notwithstanding that the population had vastly increased, they did not sell so much by two-thirds as their predecessors had disposed of when there was a much more limited population. Well, he hoped he had heard the last of that unearthing; he supposed that belonged to that kind of policy which was always raking up the mouldy things of the past. Now, coming to what this Government had done, he would say that the only really fair speech they had had on that question was that of the hon. member for Wentworth. He was very glad to hear Mr. Abbott, who knew so much about the subject, repudiate the idea that in the Land Act of 1884 it was intended to limit the sales to £200,000. If that had been intended, it would have been expressed in the law. It was simply rubbish to attempt to interpret the letter of an Act of Parliament by saying that something quite different from what was expressed was intended. The Act stated quite plainly enough that the limit should be "200,000 acres." (Hear, hear.) If it had been intended to say that land could only be sold of the value of £200,000, that would assuredly have been clearly expressed. Now, what had the Government done that the hon. member who introduced this debate should attempt so disingenuously to hold him (Sir Henry Parkes) up to odium for his action in the Lands Office? The hon. member for Eden belonged to a Government which immediately preceded the present Administration. Well, what did his Government do? (Cries of "Hear, hear.") The Government of Sir Patrick Jennings and Mr. Garvan did what no other Government had at any time presumed to do. (Cheers.) They stated in writing that "in the present financial position of the country"—showing clearly—placing on record with their own hands what they intended—"that in the present financial position of the country it was necessary to sell the utmost acre allowed by the law." (Cheers.) No other Government had said that. No other Government had placed it on record that they were wishing to alienate the public estate merely for the purpose of meeting the financial necessities of the country; but they had done that. (Hear, hear). They were branded with having proclaimed to the world that they desired to sell every acre of land they could to enable them to meet the financial necessities of the country. (Cheers.) They directed that 500,000 acres should be put into the market so that they might be sure of selling 200,000. (Hear, hear.) That was what those gentlemen did, and they were the gentlemen who accused this Government of violating the letter of the law. In 1887 this Government, instead of selling 200,000 acres as they were allowed to do, sold only a little more than half that quantity, notwithstanding that they had the encouragement of the minute of their predecessors. This year, up to September 30, the Government, instead of selling 200,000 acres, had only alienated 53,570 acres, so that they had a very good run to make to come up to the Jennings-Garvan standard of selling "on account of the financial difficulties of the country." (Cheers.) Well, he did not think that the attempt to blacken the character of the present Administration had been very successful. They had faithfully carried out the spirit of the law, and they had done nothing beyond that. They had shown no disposition whatever to force that land into the market. Now a word or two about that question of land nationalisation. Some gentlemen on the other side—a gentleman on the Government side—cried out for land nationalisation. A gentleman opposite said, "I am a faithful disciple of Henry George." Well, then that gentleman must adopt all the "wild" notions of Henry George upon the subject of free trade, because Henry George's notions of land nationalisation were intertwined with his principles of free trade. Now he would tell those philosophers that before Henry George was heard of we had far greater men—we had John Stuart Mill and Mr. Russell Wallace—take the view that property in land was unlike all other forms of property, inasmuch as the land was not created by labour or by intellect, but was a thing bestowed by the Maker which could not become property in the same sense as other forms of property created by labour or intelligence. It was because it was essentially very different from other forms of property it was not one whit more easy to nationalise it. The obstacles to the nationalisation of land were manifold, deep-seated, and close at hand—they consisted in human nature itself. Just in proportion that a man was provident, anxious for the safety of his family and their progress—just in proportion that he was a valuable member of society did he find himself stirred by the passion to possess a freehold home, and that desire

"The pride to rear an independent shed,
To give the lips we love unborrowed bread."

That became with him the master passion, and it would be so strong as to wreck any scheme of those fanciful philosophers for all time to come. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. THOMPSON said that in the Estimates of Sir Patrick Jennings he showed that he intended to realise three-hundred-and-odd-thousand pounds for the sale of public lands by public auction.

Mr. O'MARA said it was the intention of the Act that no more than £200,000 worth of land should be sold in the year. In the Act it was expressed as 200,000 acres. The Land Bill of the Parkes-Robertson Government was hopelessly wrecked because it made no provision for doing away with sales by auction. Sir Henry Parkes said that if the House had taken a division at the proper moment, the result would have been much closer, and in favour of the Government. He remembered quite well that Mr. M'Elhone delivered such a powerful speech in denunciation of the Land Bill, that no member on the Government benches dared get up and reply to it. In the appeal to the country the Parkes-Robertson Government was hopelessly wrecked by the vote of the people. The outcry was so great that the moment the House met Sir Alexander Stuart announced that the sale of land by auction would be stopped. One of the things the House should guard against was the operation of syndicates, which it was well known were present in the House, and working their little schemes through individual members. He hoped the hon. the Minister for Lands would do his best to put a stop to the abominable system of sales by auction.

Mr. BRUNKER said the question had been so fully answered by the Premier that it was almost unnecessary for him to say anything upon the subject. He had listened carefully to the speeches from hon. members, thinking that he might acquire some information which would have added to his experience, but regretted that his patience had not rewarded him in the smallest degree. The hon. members who had addressed themselves to the subject had evidently been assuming a system unknown so far as the present Government was concerned. (Hear, hear.) He was surprised to hear the hon. member who had just resumed his seat expressing himself as he did upon the question of limitation. If the hon. member had read the clause he would have found that the upset price per acre should not be lower for town lands than £8, suburban £2 10s., and other lands £1 5s. It was never the intention of the Legislature to limit the value to be realised upon the lands, nor to retard settlement, or in any way detract from serving the true interests of the people. He had always advocated, in the strongest terms, that it was the highest duty of Parliament to induce settlement—(hear, hear)—and, whilst advocating settlement, there was the necessity of protecting those who were desirous of making a home for themselves—protecting them from the persons who attended land sales throughout the country, and who had taken from the people their honest rights and the profits which should have fallen into the hands of the people of this country. No people on the face of the earth should be freer from taxation; and, with a proper system, the sales should yield such a return as would relieve the people from all but a limited degree of taxation. He did not wish to cast any aspersions on his predecessors, but he could say, without fear of contradiction, that the course of administration in the Lands Department had been devoted hitherto principally to the squatters and the selectors' interests, while the public had been left out in the cold. (Hear, hear.) But the public, who were the owners of this vast estate, should have a strong power in the Administration of the country, and he could assure hon. members that he would fear no interest; and that, while he had charge of the Department, he would exercise his best efforts to discharge the duties, honestly, independently, and efficiently. (Hear, hear.) With regard to the charge of the hon. member for Eden, that the Treasurer wished to absorb a large sum of money to increase his balance at the end of the year by the sales of land in and around the suburbs of Sydney, he might point out that the principle of the Land Bill of 1884 did not apply solely to suburban lands, but principally to the large areas of land which were being consolidated under the system of auction sales in the interior. When the hon. member said that the Government was endeavouring to increase its balance at the end of the year by forcing into the Treasury a large sum as the result of these sales, he forgot that the lands were not placed on the market as ordinary lands. As to the sales which had taken place in the suburbs of Sydney during the last month, a greater degree of care was exercised in fixing the value of those lands and getting a full report of them by the Premier than had been the case with any other similar properties which had been offered for sale in the suburbs around the city. On the first day that he (Mr. Brunker) came into office he was presented with a pile of papers and reports. With regard to them he interviewed the auctioneers, Messrs. Richardson and Wrench, in reference to the upset prices, and they recommended that they were too high, and should be reduced. The Premier would remember that he stated to him subsequently that the prices should not be changed. [Sir HENRY PARKES: Hear, hear.] But that those which had already been fixed should be maintained. He was quite confident that with the large amount of money seeking investment, there was no doubt the lands would sell and realise the full prices. In these sales they came into competition with land syndicates, for the lands were not offered in the ordinary way, viz., that the purchaser should pay 25 per cent. cash and the balance in three months, but they gave terms so that every man who wished to acquire an allotment for himself could go into the market and buy from the Government on terms equal to those which would be conceded by a land syndicate. (Hear, hear.) The terms were a quarter cash, and the balance at one, two, and three years, bearing interest at 5 per cent. per annum. (Cheers.) It would therefore be seen that instead of a large amount of money going into the Treasury at the end of the year, the hon. member might be at the head of a Government which would receive the greater portion of the revenue thus derived. With respect to lands in the interior, he was one of those who were of opinion that the lands should not be permitted to pass into the hands of large land-owners as in the olden time. The country should receive the full benefit of the increased value which the construction of public works and other improvements gave. Those lands which had a special value were notified for sale for so many days at a fixed value. At the expiration of 60 days they were open for selection, and if they were not selected within a specified time after the 60 days they were submitted to auction. In the case of the land at Corowa the upset price was increased to £4 per acre, with the result that on Thursday last a portion was taken up by ten different persons, and not by the owner of the run of which the land formed a part. In a somewhat similar case at Richmond he increased the upset price of the land from 15s. an acre, which was the price first recommended, to £30 per acre, and although his action had been described as ridiculous, yet results had shown the wisdom of his action. That was a fair proof that the Government was doing its best to conserve the interests of the country in dealing with the public estate.

Mr. GARVAN, in reply, contended that the Premier had left out a number of figures, and that therefore his quotations were absolutely misleading.

Mr. BURNS said that of the estimated land revenue this year £200,000 was for sites at the Centennial Park.

Mr. GARVAN was surprised to hear that the Government intended to sell those sites. The money it was understood should be devoted towards the erection of the State House. If the State House was not to be erected the land ought not to be sold.

Mr. BRUNKER: No one ever said that.

Mr. GARVAN said that if there was any attempt to sell this land a great protest would be made in the House against the sale. He contended that during his administration of the Lands Department the Premier allowed the sale of an unusually large quantity of land.

Sir HENRY PARKES said that Mr. Oliver distinctly stated that he had never given any instructions about auction sales, and that he never dealt with the papers.

The motion was negatived.

SYDNEY HYDRAULIC POWER COMPANY'S BILL.

On the motion of Mr. GARRARD, the House went into Committee to consider the Sydney Hydraulic Power Company's Bill.

Clauses 1 to 9 were agreed to.

Clause 10, "Power to break up streets under superintendence and to open drains," was amended so that the work should only be done with the written consent of the local authority.

Mr. ABIGAIL requested that some explanation should be made with regard to the other bill.

Mr. J. P. ABBOTT said he understood that both parties had amalgamated, and he believed the promoters of the other bill had authorised him to withdraw it.

Mr. BURNS said he would like to explain that the Mayor had called on him that day, and said that he was aware of the amalgamation of the two companies, and was desirous of seeing this bill passed as soon as possible.

The clause as amended was agreed to.

Clauses 11 and 12 (verbally amended) were agreed to.

Clauses 13 to 25 inclusive were agreed to as printed.

Clause 26 was verbally amended.

The remaining clauses were agreed to as printed.

The bill was reported with amendments, and the report was adopted.

TRADE MARKS AMENDMENT BILL.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, and Mr. Carruthers moved the expediency of bringing in a bill to amend the "Trade Marks Act of 1865," to make more effective provision for the prevention of frauds with respect to trade marks.

The motion was agreed to, and the resolution was reported to the House and adopted.

The abstract of cash receipts for the week ending November 3 showed the revenue to have been £2153 12s. 2d., making a total since the board commenced operations of £43,390 4s. 6d.

The progress report showed the number of pipes laid during the week to have been 1507, through 4908 yards of of land.

A letter was read from the Australian Jockey Club asking permission to use the triangular piece of ground situated immediately between the old and new main entrances to the [illegible]ndwick Racecourse. A motion will be submitted by Mr. Graham at a future meeting, to reconsider the whole question [illegible] water by meter in such cases as the one under notice.

After a considerable amount of discussion, the board decided to impress upon the Minister for Works the urgency of calling the attention of the Premier to the necessity of a bill being passed during the current session, dealing with the drainage and sewerage of the city. In the course of the discussion the chairman and other members of the board pointed out that this question was of vital importance in regard to the public health, and also to the revenue of the board.

According to an official report supplied to the board, 449 new meters have been applied for since May 17th of this year.

Three tenders were received for the supply of stop and air valves, the engineer's estimate for which was £2182. The tender of Messrs. Briscoe and Drysdale was accepted, the price being £1748 12s. 8d.

SYDNEY HOSPITAL BOARD.

The monthly meeting of the governors of the Sydney Hospital was held at that institution on Tuesday afternoon. The president (the Hon. A. Renwick, M.L.C.), occupied the chair, and there were present Mr. J. Pope (vice-president), Drs. A. W. Munro and Tarrant, the Hon. Mr. Abigail, and Messrs. G. N. Griffiths, I. J. Josephson, J. Starkey, S. E. Lees, M.P., A. Dean, R. M'Coy, and F. Senior. The accounts for the month, amounting to £1535 19s. 3d., were passed for payment. The treasurer's balance-sheet for the last quarter showed that the expenditure had been £7505 10s. 9d., and the receipts £7550 15s. 6d., leaving a credit balance of £45 4s. 9d. Mr. J. Pope moved,—"That the name of Mr. W. A. Hutchinson, the honorary secretary of the N. S. W. Patriotic Fund, should be made a life governor, in consideration of a sum of £300 which had been paid to the funds of the hospital." This was agreed to, and it was also decided, on the motion of Mr. Pope, that Mr. Scarratt should be made a life member, in consideration of a donation of £50; and that Mr. Josiah Mason, the first-named executor in the will of the late Alexander M'Lean Henderson should be made a life governor in consideration of a bequest of £100. Dr. Arthur G. Henry was elected resident medical officer in lieu of Dr. G. Hughes, and it was ordered that a letter should be sent to Dr. Hughes expressing the satisfaction felt by the board at the way in which he had fulfilled his duties. On the recommendation of Mr. Shadler, Mr. Martin was appointed to act as a member of the house committee, in the place of the late Mr. Robert Butcher; and it was decided that a letter of condolence should be sent to the late Mr. Butcher's widow. The president welcomed Mr. J. Starkey on his return from Europe. A letter was received from Mr. Rowe, architect, with respect to his commission, and it was decided that £1000 should be paid to him.

AUSTRALASIAN ECONOMIC ASSOCIATION.

The monthly general meeting of this association was held in the rooms, Pitt and Park streets, last night. The attendance was fair. Mr. J. T. Walker, one of the vice-presidents, was in the chair. Reference was made to the death of Sir Anthony Musgrave, Governor of Queensland. Captain Reid, and the Hon. P. J. King were elected members of the association. Mr. J. P. Wright read a paper on the "Progress of the manufactures of New South Wales from 1877 to 1887." In this paper he stated that whereas the bona-fide manufactures had increased during the period named 42 per cent., the population had increased 62 per cent. He then examined the condition and progress of the partially protected manufactures, contrasting them with condition and progress of the non-protected manufactures. The cause of the decrease of hands employed in some of the manufactures was explained to be due to the fact that to-day we were relatively nearer to England, Europe, and America, than we were 10 years ago, through the quickening of passages from those places to Australia. The action of the surrounding colonies in closing their gates against our produce and manufactures was also noticed. The article was written for the purpose of showing the superiority of protection over freetrade.

The discussion on Mr. Forsyth's paper, "The Relations of Labour and Capital" was commenced. Mr. Chaid, Mr. Wilson, Captain Reid, and Messrs. Carment, Cormack, and Walker spoke on the question, most of them adversely criticising Mr. Forsyth's paper. Mr. Forsyth replied at some length to the attacks made upon his paper, and the debate was then adjourned till next meeting.

The Redfern Literary and Debating Society held their weekly meeting on Wednesday ast, and there was a very good attendance, Mr. H. M'Lachlan, vice-president, in the chair. It was a smoke night, and readings, recitations, and music formed the evening's entertainment, which passed off with great success. Messrs. Woolf, Grierson, Henry, Butterfield, Hicks, Morton, M'Lachlan, and Mullarkey took part in the proceedings. Miss Hanigan acted as accompanist and gave several selections on the pianoforte, for which she received a cordial vote of thanks at the close of the proceedings.

LAW REPORT.

SUPREME COURT.—Tuesday, November 6.

In Banco—(Before their Honors the Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Innes, and Mr. Justice Foster.)

BLUNT AND OTHERS V. TERRY AND OTHERS (PART HEARD).

Mr. Pilcher, Q.C., Mr. C. J. Manning, and Mr. H. Manning, instructed by Mr. A. Ashdown, appeared for the appellants (plaintiffs); Mr. Lingen, instructed by Messrs. Curtiss and Barry, for defendant Wild; and Mr. Gregory Walker and Mr. Edmunds, instructed by Mr. J. A. Flynn, for defendant Phillips. Defendant Terry was not represented. This was an appeal against the decree of his Honor the Chief Judge in Equity, in the abovenamed suit, made on the 13th July last. The plaintiffs were Frederick Blunt and certain parties trading as Jennings, Pickering, and Co.; the defendants Richard Rouse Terry, William Edgar Harold Phillips, and John Greer Mitcham Wild. This suit was mainly one between the plaintiff Frederick Blunt and defendant William Edgar Harold Phillips, and the prayer of the claim was that it might be declared that plaintiff Blunt was entitled to a transfer of Hoxton Park, subject only to the payment of £13,500, and that defendant Phillips might be ordered to withdraw that transfer from the defendant Terry.

Mr. Lingen resumed and concluded his arguments on behalf of defendant Wild, and was followed by Mr. Walker and Mr. Edmunds for defendant Phillips. Mr. Pilcher having replied, judgment was reserved.

Jury Court.—(Before his Honor Mr Justice Stephen and a jury of four.)

TASMANIAN STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY V. BROWN AND ANOTHER (PART HEARD).

The Attorney-General and Dr. R. M. Sly, instructed by Dr. G. J. Sly, appeared for the plaintiffs; and Mr. Rogers, Q.C., Mr. Pilcher, Q.C., and Mr. C. B. Stephen, instructed by Messrs. Norton, Smith, Westgarth, and Co., for the defendants. This was an action brought by the Tasmanian Steam Navigation Company against John Brown and Alexander Brown, trading as J. and A. Brown, to recover compensation for injuries sustained and expenses incurred by them owing to the negligent, improper, and careless navigation by defendants' servants of their steamtug Bungaree in June last, in consequence of which a collision occurred in Newcastle harbour between the plaintiff company's steamship Flora and the ship British Empire. The damages claimed were £380, being amount paid by plaintiffs to the owners of the British Empire for repairs, and £34 10s., the sum paid for repairs to the Flora. Further evidence was called for the defence, and among the witnesses examined was Robert C. Wallace, Newcastle, agent for the plaintiff company, who was questioned with reference to a business card issued by the defendants, and containing the following condition, "On the hiring of a steam tug for towage purposes, the master and crew thereof became the servants of, and identified with, the ship, and are under the control of the person in charge of the ship during the performance of the contract. The steam tug owners only undertake to provide the motive power; the steam tug owners are therefore not responsible for the acts or defaults of the master or crew of the steam tugs, nor for any damage or loss that may arise to ship or cargo, nor for any damage caused by any defect in, or accident happening to, the machinery of the steam tug, or of the towing-gear, or of any peril of the seas, river, or navigation." The witness admitted that he had seen cards with such a condition attached, and was under the impression that it represented the custom or usage of tug owners at the port of Newcastle; he had, however, not seen the card issued by Brown and Co., and containing the condition referred to, for some years as far as he remembered. The evidence of William Kydd, master of the ship British Empire, taken de bene esse, was also read; he stated that on the night of the collision and while he was below he heard the second officer call out to the master of the Flora to look where he was going, and warning him that he was allowing his vessel to come too close to the British Empire; witness subsequently told the master of the Flora that it was no wonder he could not judge his distance from another vessel, as he had so many lights about the deck, and it was to this fact that he attributed the collision. The master of the tug Bungaree was also examined, and stated that on the night of the collision the tide was running three knots an hour, with a fresh in the river, and when he consulted the master of the Flora as to whether, owing to the state of the tide, he would postpone his departure till the morning; he said he would go out that night; owing to the lights which were kept on the deck of the Flora witness could not see anything beyond those lights, and this, in his opinion, was the main cause of the collision, assisted by the strong tide running.

The case was not concluded when the Court adjourned.

In Equity.—(Before his Honor Mr. Justice Owen, Chief Judge in Equity.)

DIBBS V. DIBBS.

His Honor gave judgment in this matter as follows:—This is an application of the plaintiff to amend his statement of claim. The claim sets forth in full an agreement in writing entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant on the 9th February, 1882, the preamble of which states that—"For the purpose of settling all disputes and differences arising upon the accounts between Alfred Sandeman, the official assignee of the insolvent estate of George Richard Dibbs, or the said George Richard Dibbs and Thomas Allwright Dibbs, in reference to the Wharf and Euroka properties, and all the relations existing between these parties in respect thereof, whether as partner, co-owner, mortgager, or otherwise, and to enable the said George Richard Dibbs to obtain the release of his estate from sequestration. It is proposed:—1. That the said Thomas Allwright Dibbs submit an offer to the said Alfred Sandeman, as such official assignee, for the purchase from him of his Equity of Redemption Estate and interest in the Euroka and wharf properties, and in all the personal and prospective assets and appurtenances connected therewith respectively, for the sum of £14,000, and that he consent that the bill in Equity filed by him against the said Thomas Allwright Dibbs be dismissed, without costs." The agreement then set out several provisions for the adjustment of the accounts between the parties, and for the sale of Euroka, and for fixing "the purchase price" for the one-half share in the wharf property. The seventh clause is in the words following:—"That the one-half share in the land forming the wharf property shall remain under offer to the said George Richard Dibbs at such price for a period of 12 months from this date. And upon the payment at any time within such period of 12 months of such purchase price, and of one-half of any sums which the said T. A. D. may expend during the said 12 months in building or other permanent improvements upon the said wharf property, the said Thomas Allwright Dibbs shall transfer to the said George Richard Dibbs one undivided half-share in the said wharf lands." At the foot of the document the plaintiff wrote, "I accept the above proposals." The claim then states that, in accordance with the said agreement, the defendant paid the sum of £141,000 to the said Alfred Sandeman, who transferred to the defendant his right, title, and interest in Euroka and Dibbs Wharf, and that the estate of the plaintiff was duly released from sequestration; that before the expiry of the 12 months referred to in the agreement the defendant told the plaintiff that he did not desire in any way to hold him to the said period of 12 months, but that he could at any time come in and avail himself of the terms of the said agreement. The plaintiff alleges that, relying on the said promise, he took no immediate action in the matter, but continued to look after the wharf property, but that the defendant subsequently refused to carry out his promise. The plaintiff then charges that he is, by virtue of the said agreement, as extended by the defendant, entitled to share in the profits arising from the sale of the wharf. The statement of defence is limited to a denial of the alleged promise and a plea of the Statute of Frauds in respect of the said promise. At the hearing the plaintiff sought to give in evidence the circumstances surrounding the parties at the date of the agreement, the real value of the wharf property, and the negotiations leading up to the agreement, with the view of showing that the real agreement between the parties was that the transaction referred to in the first clause was to be a mortgage and not an absolute sale, and that the offer referred to in the 7th clause conferred a right to redeem, and not to repurchase. I then ruled that such evidence was inadmissible on the pleadings. Thereupon the plaintiff applied for leave to amend, with a view of raising such a case on the pleadings. The Rule 147, as to amendment of pleadings, provides that "a special order for leave to amend any pleading may be granted at any time upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as may seem just, and all such amendments shall be made as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions or question in controversy between the parties." The proper construction of this rule appears to me to be that the parties may make all such amendments as may be necessary to ascertain and place upon record the true issue or issues to be determined by the Court, but not so as to make a new case, or set up a different issue to that raised in the original pleadings. There are not many reported cases as to amendments under the analogous rule in England, but such as there are appear to me to bear out this construction. In Newby v. Sharpe, 8 Ch. D. 39, the Appellate Court expressed a strong opinion that an amendment converting a claim on the footing of a subsisting lease into a claim on the footing of eviction ought not to have been allowed. In that case the defendant had let part of a building to the plaintiff for the purpose of storing cartridges, and as other parts of the building were used for storing gunpowder the defendant, to protect himself from the penalties of the Explosives Act of 1875, removed the plaintiff's cartridges. The plaintiff thereupon filed his claim to restrain the defendant from obstructing the storing of his cartridges. The issue raised by the original claim was that the defendant was precluded by the terms of the lease from removing the cartridges, and he sought by his amendment to raise a different issue, i.e., that the removal of the cartridges was an eviction. The Court held that he could not do so, as it entirely altered the nature of the case made by the original claim. In Tildsley v. Harper, 10 Ch. D. 393, Th. Lesiger L.J., expresses the same view. He says,—"The object of these rules is to obtain a correct issue between the parties, and when an error has been made it is not intended that the party making the mistake should be mulcted in the loss of the trial." The case of Laird v. Briggs, 16 Ch. D. 440, was cited as a decision of Fry, J., disallowing certain amendments. On further research I found that the case had been carried to the Appellate Court, and there one of the amendments had been allowed, but both the allowance and disallowance of the amendments appear to be based on the principle I have stated. In that case the plaintiff claimed to be tenant in possession of a part of the foreshore at Margate, and sought to restrain the defendant from removing shingle therefrom. In his original statement of defence, the defendant claimed by 40 years' enjoyment an easement entitling him to do the acts complained of, and denied that the plaintiff was in possession except subject to the rights of the defendant. He sought to amend his statement of defence (1) by striking out the qualifying words, "except subject to the rights of the defendant," so as to make the denial of the plaintiff's possession an absolute one; and (2) by making the defendant claim "to be the owner of and to enter upon the foreshore." The first amendment appears to be the only one referred to by Sir G. Jessel and Cotton, L.J., in their judgments; but Brett, L.J., refers also to the second. Sir G. Jessel says there were two issues raised by the original pleadings: one was the title of the plaintiff to sue the defendant at all; the second was the title of the defendant to the easement by virtue of the statutory right. Under the first issue the amendment was allowed, striking out the qualifying words, so as to raise the issue of the plaintiff's right to sue without any admission on the defendant's part. The second amendment by which the defendant claimed to be owner of the foreshore, instead of having an easement only, was disallowed. Brett, L.J., says: "Now I think Newby v. Sharpe was a strong authority against the second amendment which was asked for, but was no authority against the first, which, I think, ought to have been allowed." The only case that I can find which carries the right to amend further than I have stated is the case of Budding v. Murdock, 1 ch. D. 42, which was decided in the year 1875, just after the new rule was promulgated. In that case Sir G. Jessel certainly went to a considerable length in allowing an amendment, the headnote of the case stating, "So as to raise an entirely new case;" but in re St. Nazaire Company, 12 ch. D. 92, Sir G. Jessel said he never went so far as is represented in the headnote to that case, showing that he did not consider the amendment to raise a new case. Now, applying this principle to the facts of the present case, I have to determine whether the proposed amendments make clear the issue raised between the parties, or whether they make a new case and raise a new issue. Now, the case made by the claim is based on the written agreement, modified only by a verbal promise to extend the time mentioned in the 7th clause. There is no suggestion that the real agreement was different to that which appears in writing, or that the offer to purchase contained in the 7th clause was really a right to redeem. The statement of defence, too, is limited to a denial of the alleged promise to extend the time and a plea of the Statute of Frauds to such alleged verbal promise. The sole issue, therefore, is whether or not such a promise was made, and if made whether it is not void under the Statute of Frauds. The case proposed to be made by the amendments is wholly different and raises a different issue. It does not rest on the written agreement as it stands, in the natural sense of the words used, but on a modified agreement moulded so as to express the real intentions of the parties. The transaction referred to in clause 1 of the agreement as a "purchase," is to be read as a "mortgage," and the offer to purchase at a fixed price in clause 7 is to be read as a right to redeem. If the 7th clause were to be so construed the promise to extend the time would be unnecessary, for a mortgagor would be allowed to come in and redeem without any such promise. The issue therefore under the amended statement of claim would not be whether such a promise was made, but whether the written agreement expresses the real meaning of the parties, and if not whether the parties intended that the plaintiff should have a right to redeem and not a mere right to repurchase. It such an amendment were allowed, not only would the plaintiff make out a new case but the defendant would have to set up a new defence, and the evidence at the hearing would be of an entirely different character. It was further contended that I ought to allow these amendments for the purpose of showing whether time was of the essence of the contract. But that appears to me to be only another way of expressing the same question. If the agreement is intended to be in the nature of a mortgage instead of a purchase, and if the right given to the plaintiff under clause 7, is a right to redeem, and not a right to repurchase, then time is not of the essence of the contract, in this sense, that the mortgagor can come in and redeem after the expiry of the time mentioned. If, on the other hand, the agreement was for a purchase, and the right given to the plaintiff is to repurchase, then time is of the essence of the contract, for the Courts always adhere strictly to the terms of such a contract. Barrell v. Sabine, 1 Vernon, 268. Ensworth v. Griffiths, 5 Bro., P.C., 184. I must therefore refuse the application for leave to amend.

MASON V. WHITE.

In this case Mr. Bateman appeared for the plaintiff, and was granted a decree, a receiver to be appointed. There was no appearance on the other side.

GRIFFIN V. THE TONKIN SILVER-MINING COMPANY.

Mr. A. H. Simpson, for Messrs. Mills and Pile, the defendants, applied for a rehearing of the suit. Mr. Walker, for the Tonkin Silver-mining Company, opposed. Mr. C. J. Manning represented the plaintiff. The application was refused.

In Divorce.—(Before his Honor Mr. Justice Stephen.)

COMER V. COMER (HOWELL CO-RESPONDENT).

Mr. G. E. Rich, instructed by Messrs. Fitzhardinge and Houston, appeared for the petitioner, W. A. Comer; and Mr. Tarleton, instructed by Mr. W. J. Hill, for G. A. Comer, the respondent. The suit, which was brought by the husband against the wife, was tried in November, 1887, and on the 7th April last arguments were heard on the motion for the decree nisi for dissolution. On Saturday last his Honor delivered his reserved judgment as follows:—In this case certain issues were sent down for trial by a jury. Among them were the following:—Whether the respondent was guilty of adultery with the co-respondent Howell on a day in the month of June, 1886, at Ti-Tree House, Sydney; whether the said petitioner was guilty of cruelty towards the said respondent between the 1st day of March, 1880, and the 30th of March, 1886, at Sydney, Bowral, and other places. The jury answered both questions in the affirmative. They also, in answer to a question from me, said that in their opinion the cruelty conduced to the adultery. On the motion for a decree nisi it was contended for the respondent that it ought not to be granted—first, because the evidence only established the fact of adultery having taken place in June or July; the two witnesses who were called to prove the adultery not being able to fix the time more closely. My opinion is that the respondent, not having moved for a new trial, cannot now ask me to refrain from making a decree, founded upon a verdict, that adultery was committed by the respondent, although only attributing it to a day in one of those months. I am not aware that her case was in any way prejudiced by the uncertainty of the witnesses as to the precise month. She denied that she knew Howell, except by repute, and that she had ever been in Ti Tree House in her life, with Howell or anyone else; and averred that she did not even know where the house is. The second ground taken was, that the jury having found that there was cruelty, and that it had conduced to the adultery, I was not bound to, and ought not to, pronounce the decree. Mr. Gibson, for the respondent, cited a number of cases showing that in England, where the petitioner had been guilty of adultery, the Court would not, except under the most special circumstances, grant him relief, and that I ought to apply the same principle where there had been such a finding as the present against the petitioner, or even where the verdict had simply been one establishing cruelty. I may here remark that the question of cruelty (as decided lately in Dorn v. Dorn) alone ought to have been left to the jury, and that it is not an element for their consideration whether or not it conduced to the adultery—at all events not upon the issue as sent down to the jury. I must, therefore, I conceive, regard the finding as one of cruelty alone. Now, according to Mr. Justice Windeyer's judgment in that case, which I take to be a correct exposition of the law, it would be competent for me, on such finding, in the exercise of the discretion vested in me by the 27th section, to withhold a decree. But as he points out, in the vast majority of cases a Judge would regulate that discretion by his consideration of the question whether the cruelty did or did not conduce to the adultery: and it is to this question that I have addressed myself, and having come to a conclusion adverse to the respondent, I feel that I ought to pronounce the decree, to which the petitioner is otherwise entitled. I must confess that at the outset I felt embarrassed by this consideration, that if it is my duty to say whether the petitioner's cruelty conduced to the adultery—and that cruelty the cruelty found by the jury, not by me—how am I, in utter ignorance of what particular acts the jury considered proved, and what was the degree of cruelty exercised, to form a judgment as to whether it conduced to adultery? Some of the acts complained of are alleged to have taken place shortly after the marriage—six years before the two isolated acts in March, 1886, which appeared to be most serious in character, and were, of course, chiefly relied on. The jury did not on other points believe the respondent. They disbelieved her denial of adultery with Howell, and her assertions of being eye-witness to her husband's adultery. Her evidence as to the extent of her husband's violence appeared to me to have scarcely a corroboration. A medical man, whom she averred that she had consulted, at Goulburn, was not called, and another medical man was examined by her counsel in such a manner as led me to the conclusion that she desired him to say as little as possible. My own impression was, to say the least, that the respondent gave an exaggerated description of what had occurred. However, I suppose that I must conclude that what she deposed to substantially took place. I have little doubt that personal violence was used on one occasion—in March, 1886—possibly on another. Taking this to be so, I remark that these people had been married and lived together for about six years. They had had quarrels; but there is no evidence of ill-usage between some time in the year 1880, and the two occasions referred to in March, 1886. One of these was, according to the respondent's evidence, unprovoked, and a violent and cruel assault. The other occurred a few days after, when the respondent accused her husband of adultery with one Amelia Harris, having, as she appears to have told him, seen him in the act. The assault on this occasion was, as alleged, a violent and cruel one, for which, on her prosecution, the husband was fined £10, a light punishment indeed if it was such as she represented it to be on the trial before me. After this the respondent left her husband, and, as I understand it, was not left without the means of support. According to her own statement she occupied the same bed with her husband at an hotel kept by one Webb, about July the same year; they lunched together at another place with a relative of the petitioner, who remarked to them that they seemed the best of friends. She stated also, "I have been with my husband twice to Mr. Hill's; I have been walking about with him lots of times—lunching with him." Webb said that they slept together in June or July, 1886, at his hotel—"had several meals together and seemed quite friendly." It was in one or other of these months that she, as two witnesses stated, and whom the jury believed, committed adultery with Howell. Had she flown in the first instance to the protection of any then friend or acquaintance, or to one who may have befriended her subsequently to the events we have been considering, and yielded herself to him, something might have been said in her excuse; but, as far as we know, Howell was a stranger, having no claim on her, or she on him; and she consorts with him about the very period, when, as she herself says, she was meeting her husband on friendly terms. I cannot, therefore, hold that the two instances of cruelty charged led in any way to her adultery. I may add that, among the many English authorities cited, I can only find one where cruelty and misconduct of the husband were made the ground for refusing a decree nisi. In that (Lempriere v. Lempriere, L. P. 1, Pr. and Div. 569) the husband had for years treated his wife with great barbarity, was an habitual drunkard, and had savagely beaten his wife on numerous occasions. He had been many times before the magistrates, and had been sentenced to six months' imprisonment for an assault upon her. The Judge said that it was scarcely too much to say that his treatment of his wife drove her into cohabitation with another man. Failing, as I do, to find that the petitioner's cruelty conduced to his wife's adultery, I am led to consider whether it is a case where the cruelty alone should make me stay my hand. It has been urged, as before mentioned, that I should give the same effect to the proof of cruelty as is given in the English Courts to that of adultery on the part of the husband. I cannot lay down any such principle. It is obvious that acts of cruelty may differ so much in degree—may be committed under such a multitude of varying circumstances—that you cannot apply the hard and fast line which those courts have laid down with respect to adultery. The judgment, too, of Mr. Justice Windeyer, to which I have already referred, seems to negative any supposition that it can be so applied. There may be cases, as his Honor says, where the Court, on the establishment of cruelty alone, without further inquiry, may deem it right to refuse a decree. But, in my opinion, this is not one of them; and I refer to my short review of the circumstances, already given, in support of that conclusion.

In Bankruptcy—(Before his Honor Mr. Justice Deffell.)

The plaintiff David Ralston Muir, of Sydney, sought to recover £14 4s. from the defendant, Thomas Henley, of Balmain, balance of an account alleged to be due on 31 casks of cement. CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT—Tuesday.

(Before his Honor Mr. Justice Windeyer.)

Mr. H. E. Cohen and Mr. Coffey appeared on behalf of the Crown.

THE ALLEGED MURDER AT BOTANY.

The trial of Louisa Collins for the alleged murder of her husband, Michael Peter Collins, at Botany, on the 8th of July last, was continued.

Mr. Lusk appeared on behalf of the accused.

Senior-constable Sherwood, stationed at Botany, deposed that he went to see the deceased at his house on the night of July 7th; Collins (who was in bed) said he was suffering from a cold, and that he would be all right in a few days; witness asked him if he had taken anything to make him vomit, and he replied no; the accused said, "I know what he has taken, it was I who gave him his medicine;" deceased complained of a pain in his shoulder; witness went to the house on the Sunday morning, and found the accused sitting by the bed holding the deceased's hand, and saying "Poor Mick! poor Mick!" the accused told him the doctor was not coming again; the deceased with great difficulty reached out of bed and took a cup containing a brown fluid from the box by the bedside and took a drink; deceased told him it was cold tea he was drinking; witness saw on the stand a tumbler containing a fluid resembling milk; he did not think the deceased could reach the glass; witness then went away; he returned again at 11 o'clock at night and found Collins dead; the body was lying on the table in the front room; the accused was slightly under the influence of liquor; on the Monday witness searched the premises after Constable Jeffes had removed the body and the bottles and glasses; witness only found a bottle of oil; he afterwards met the accused in the street, and she said "Isn't it strange the doctor won't give me a certificate?" he afterwards arrested the accused, and when leaving the house she said, "Am I coming back again?" she then sat down upon a chair, and covering her face with her hands said, "I know I'm not coming back again;" she was under the influence of liquor at the time; on the way to the station witness asked her it she had given the deceased anything, and she replied "Yes, I gave him what the doctor ordered;" she also admitted having given the deceased a vomiting powder; at the police station she was charged on suspicion with having caused the death of her husband, Michael Peter Collins, at Botany, on or about the 8th of July; she made no reply to the charge.

William Thompson, chemist, employed by Mr. Hamilton, Regent-street, said he could not say whether he made up the mixture prescribed by Dr. Marshall; he remembered, on looking at the record in the books, making up some powders for Collins prescribed by Dr. Marshall; there was no arsenic in the powders.

John Thomas Osmond, chemist, carrying on business in York-street, said he remembered a prescription of Dr. Marshall's being brought to his shop to be made up for Collins; he made up the prescription; there was no arsenic used in the preparation.

Arthur Hammil, labourer, living at Botany, said he knew the accused and her husband; he saw Collins when he was ill in bed, but whilst he was in the house he never gave the deceased anything to drink.

Margaret Hammil, wife of the last witness, gave similar evidence.

A number of witnesses who gave evidence at the former trial stated in effect that they visited Collins's house during the time he was ill, and saw the accused attending to the deceased and giving him certain things to drink. Their evidence also went to show that none of them had mixed any drinks for the deceased, but had at times handed to him certain drinks which were on the box in the bedroom.

James Law, fellmonger, residing at Botany, deposed that he had been employed in the same yard as the deceased was employed in for a period of three or four years; Collins, just before his illness, was employed in carting skins from Glebe Island, but was frequently employed in the yard "pulling" green skins; it was not an unusual thing for a skin-puller to get his hands poisoned.

Alfred Ralph, employed at Geddes' woolwashing establishment, said he knew the deceased and was working with him about a month before his death; deceased used to drive a dray with green skins fresh from Glebe Island; during the month before Collins died he never saw him working in the yard; arsenic was not used in the preparation of skins at the place where they worked.

Frederick Andrews, son of the accused, gave evidence to the effect that at the request of his mother he obtained for her a vomiting powder at a chemist's shop in Waterloo.

By Mr. Lusk: The accused and Collins always lived on good terms.

Arthur Andrews, son of the accused, gave evidence to the effect that during the illness of the deceased he never mixed any drinks for him; the accused used to drink about a month before Collins's death, and Collins stated he would have it stopped.

By Mr. Lusk: The accused and Collins used to live very happily together.

May Andrews, a child 11 years of age, and daughter of the accused, gave evidence to the effect that the accused one day sent her to get some beer, and told her that money was no use whilst Mick was in the house, and that she would get some more money when he died; she had seen her mother drink brandy and beer, and had sometimes heard Collins speak cross to her; on the Saturday before Collins died she saw a box underneath a white basin on the shelf; she saw a similar box only once before, and that was just before her own father died; the box contained a dark blue powder, and on the cover of the box were the words "Rough on Rats;" she showed the box to her mother, but could not say what became of it afterwards; she thought her mother took it.

The evidence given by the accused at the coroner's inquest was put in and read.

This closed the case for the Crown.

For the defence,

Walter Hayes, fellmonger, deposed that he knew the deceased, Collins, and lived in his house as a lodger for some time; the accused and her husband lived on good terms, and there was no quarrelling between them; he worked with the deceased six or seven weeks before he died; Collins was employed in driving and doing anything about the yard at the wool-wash; the deceased had at times to handle skins both green and dry; Collins had a running sore on his leg at the time he was handling the skins.

Harry Montgomery, horse-driver, deposed that he lived in the house with Collins and the accused about the end of last year; accused and Collins lived on good terms. Similar evidence was given by Augustus Norggren.

Ellen Price, residing at Botany, deposed that she went to the house to lay the deceased out after his death; the body was dressed in shirt, trousers, and socks.

By Mr. Cohen: There was nothing in the pockets of the trousers.

At this stage the Court adjourned until 10 o'clock on the following morning. We have been requested to state that the jurors summoned for Wednesday will not be required to attend until Thursday morning.

MAGISTERIAL INQUIRIES.

ACCIDENTAL DROWNING.

A magisterial inquiry was held by Mr. H. T. Wilkinson, J.P., at the Croydon Arms, yesterday, into the circumstances attending the death of John Gleeson, of No. 27, Waverley-road, Woollahra, whose dead body was found in the water off Dalgety's Wharf on Sunday morning. At 1.30 a.m. on the day in question a man named John Kennedy heard a splash in the vicinity of Dalgety's Wharf, at the end of Kent-street, and just afterwards the night watchman on the barque Furners Abbey called out, "Man overboard." They both saw a man struggling in the water, and threw a line and held out a long stick, but he made no effort to grasp either. As the tide was low, the boat was high and dry, and they could not get it afloat to go to the assistance of the drowning man. The police were informed, and Constable Wallace recovered the body after dragging for a few minutes. The deceased was seen shortly before the occurrence, and showed no signs of being the worse for drink. One witness said that the deceased occasionally drank to excess, but his last employer gave him a good character for sobriety. Deceased was a native of Bega, and at one time had been an hotelkeeper. Latterly he was working as a groom. He had been separated from his wife for two years. Dr. C. F. Eichler examined the body at the North Sydney Morgue. It appeared to have been submerged for a short time, and the limbs were flexed. The cause of death was asphyxia from drowning. The magistrate, after hearing the evidence, expressed the opinion that it was a case of accidental drowning.

KILLED BY A QUOIT.

A magisterial inquiry was held by Mr. H. T. Wilkinson, J.P., at the Coroner's Office yesterday morning into the circumstances attending the death of Harry Mansen, aged 10, who died at the Hospital on Sunday from injuries received through a blow from a quoit on October 26. Senior-sergeant Pierre conducted the case. While in the hospital the deceased told his father that he was chasing another boy when the quoit struck him. He left home on the morning of October 26 to attend school, and his parents next saw him in the Sydney Hospital, where he had been taken by James Leonard. The boy's father saw Leonard on the Saturday after the accident. Leonard said that he was throwing a quoit, and just as it left his hand the boy ran across and the quoit struck him. The inquiry was then adjourned till the following day.

KILLED BY A FALL.

Mr. H. T. Wilkinson, J.P., held a magisterial inquiry at the Coroner's Office yesterday afternoon as to the cause of the death of Robert Savage, aged 17, who died at the Hospital on Monday, having been admitted to that institution while suffering from compression of the brain consequent on a fall sustained at the new Lands Office. The deceased was a bricklayer, and was of temperate habits. On Monday he was working at the new Lands Office, and about 4 p.m. slipped while descending a ladder, and fell down an excavation. After the accident it was found that one of the rungs of the ladder was broken. The deceased was taken to the Hospital, and died half-an-hour after admission. Dr. Fisher made a post-mortem examination, and found that the skull was fractured at the back and also at the right side. There was much blood on the surface of the brain. The cause of death was pressure on the brain of blood, due to the fracture of the skull. The finding of the magistrate was that of accidental death.

LICENSING COURT.

A meeting of the Licensing Bench was held at noon yesterday at the Central Police Court, there being present Messrs. T. K. Abbott, S.M. (chairman), W. Johnson, S.M., and the Hon. John Macintosh, L.M. The application made by William Wilshire for a publican's conditional license for premises situated at the corner of Junction-street and Canterbury-road, Petersham, was refused. The application made for the transfer of a publican's licence from John Lang to William Woodward for the Locomotive Hotel, Regent-street, was refused, on the ground that Woodward was not a fit and proper person to conduct the hotel. The following transfers were granted:—From William Scott to Thomas Harris, the Hereford Arms Hotel, Rose-street; from Ellen Wallace to John Brayley, the Sportsman's Arms Hotel, Botany-road; from Myles Downes to Maud Boland, the Lalla Rookh Hotel, Newtown-road; from William Nicholls to Robert Woodbridge, the Cleveland Inn, Buckingham-street; from Thomas White to Solomon Warrar, the Reservoir Hotel, Camperdown; from Thomas Saywell to William Dickson, the New Brighton Hotel, Lady Robinson's Beach. The application of Hephzibah M'Dowell, administratrix in the estate of the late R. M'Dowell, for the continuance of the license of the Oddfellows' Hotel, George-street, Redfern, was also granted. John Sturt obtained a renewal of his license for the Palace Hotel, Mortlake. An auctioneer's license was granted to F. Barton. A number of music permits and several hawkers' licenses were also allowed.

SILVERTON, Tuesday.

The following exports of minerals were entered by Mr. Chas. Chapple for the week ending November 3:—Lady Brassey Silver-mining Company, 170 bags silver and lead ore, weighing 12 tons, value £180; Josephine Silver-mining Company, 62 bags silver ore, weight 3 tons 3dwt. 1qr., value £145; Stirling, Hart, and Co., Mundi Mundi, 20 bales greasy wool, weight 7564lb., value £190.

MANAGERS' REPORTS.

Bourke's Reef, Temora.—The last crushing of 25 tons yielded 24oz. 7dwt. 12gr. We are putting on more hands to raise a large quantity to keep machine going day and night.

Terrible Dick Silver-mining Company, Limited, Silverton, October 30.—Arrangements in the main shaft for lowering the plunger are nearly completed, and I intend to resume sinking next week. The winze is down 80ft., and I am now putting in a crosscut of a few feet to the 180ft. level, which I expect to cut in a day or two. I shall then get rid of the water and put men on to commence stoping between the two lower levels. The crosscut to the eastern lode is now in 43ft., through ground a little easier. The north drive has been driven a further 5ft., still showing galena. The shaft on block 75 is now down 67ft., and a body of ironstone is appearing here.

White Rock Proprietary Silver-mining Company, Limited, November 5.—Water is coming into the shaft in such quantities that sinking is suspended for the present. Excavations progressing rapidly and engine beds complete. Tramway works: 12 tiers of an average height of 20ft. are completed. A fine vein in decomposed country has been exposed at the south-western end of the mine.

Baker's Creek South Gold-mining Company, Limited, Hillgrove, November 3.—I have continued the tunnel some 4ft. past the reef spoken of in my last and have come into a complete change of country, real fine clean slate such as we have not had before, and from indications last evening and to-day another change is not far off—probably another vein or reef. The roads are now finished and a portion of the excavations necessary for forge and mouth of new tunnel already done.

Mount Costigan South Extended Silver and Lead Mining Company, No Liability, November 3.—During the week the tunnel has been further developed, and now reaches 291ft. to the face. A fresh contract has been made to sink the last 50ft. in No. 1 shaft, and this will then connect the tunnel. The new shaft on No. 273 is now down 9ft.; the lode continues to increase in size, and is now 3ft. wide, while the ore has improved considerably. The last assay from an unpicked sample went—silver 81oz. 12dwt. 12gr., and gold 10dwt. 14gr. per ton.

Broken Hill Block Silver Mine, November 2.—The diamond drill has sunk a further depth of 33ft. during the last week, making the total depth now attained 929ft. The strata passed through are quartzite and gneiss. The second boiler has been built in, and is now supplying steam to work the diamond drill. The old boiler is being used for driving the winding engine, which is at present employed hauling water from the main engine shaft. I have received advice from my directors in Brisbane of the purchase of a rock-drilling plant, comprising one 25-horse power engine, one air compressor, and three of Ingersoll's rock drills. These will shortly arrive, and will be at once placed in position, to be ready when sinking the shaft is again commenced. Tenders are called for an air receiver to be delivered at the mine in the shortest possible time.

Stewart's Freehold Mining Company.—The bore is down a depth of 70ft. in rock.

The Chalk's No. 3 Gold-mining Company, No Liability.—The shaft has been sunk 5ft. for the fortnight, making the depth 31ft.

Prince of Wales and Old Poverty, Tarnagulla, November 1.—Now engaged fixing frame and timbering chambers at 750ft. level; when finished will slab that portion of the shaft. Have continued surface prospecting, and on sinking on the eastern lode found that the stone cut out, and appeared to go away west. Started then to sink on western lode. Now down about 5ft., and have a well-defined wall underlying east. Believe a payable reef may be found by sinking a prospecting shaft between the two lodes and crosscutting at intervals.

Last Chance Tribute, Ballarat East.—No. 2 level: Davis and party are still rising, and are also driving on stone of fair quality; 9dwt. per ton. Bookman and party have been crushing stone of poor quality. No. 3 level: Grainger and party are driving No. 1 north to meet winze; are also stoping, and have struck stone showing gold freely. The prospecting drive for Britannia lode has been driven through a nice slate country with bunches of quartz, giving out a fair quantity of water; have driven for fortnight 24ft.; gold, 3loz.

New Normanby, Ballarat East.—No. 2 level: Jones and party are working a nice body of stone of payable character; indicator drives at Nos. 3 and 4 levels are stopped; stone very small. No. 5 level: Stone in indicator improving in quality; sinking has been stopped for the present; water too heavy. Crushed 87 tons for 41oz. 2dwt.

Mount Costigan Lead and Silver Mining Company, Limited, November 4.—New shaft: The contractors have reached a depth of 100ft. 150ft. level (south end), western lode: Good show of sulphide ore, about 2ft. 6in. wide. Lode looking well. Will start sinking a winze here in a few days to communicate with winze to the north. 45ft. level (south end): There is a good carbonate lode going off to the south, about 3ft. wide. We are raising a large quantity of sulphide ore from the stopes between the 98 and 45 feet levels. There is a bunch of ore here about 12ft. wide.

The Golden Gully Gold-mining Company, Limited.—Main shaft sunk 9ft.; total from surface, 157ft. 6in. At a depth of 50ft. from plat, cut a quartz leader, about 5in. thick, showing fair gold; stone running north and south, underlaying east. Will timber up shaft coming fortnight. No. 1 west crosscut extended 10ft.; total from plat, 46ft.; stone bearing away to the north. This crosscut must be pushed ahead to give us backs on our ironstone and reefs above crosscut. Clay vein about 9ft. above back of this crosscut. No. 1 south level extended 16ft.; total from plat, 136. Small spurs making in face. Clay vein in this level 3in. thick.

Royal Standard Gold-mining Company, No Liability, November 3.—Battery started again, and about 30 tons crushed. Mine going on as usual. I am going to put the men into the south stopes of No. 2 winze, and open up another between, and stope out to No. 1 winze, to keep things going till we get No. 2 main drive into good stuff. When this contract is complete I will put on three shifts of my own men, and push on as quickly as possible. Will try and break No. 1 winze into No. 2 drive next week. About 30 tons of quartz at grass.

Webb's Silver-mining Company, Limited, November 2.—During the month the main shaft has been sunk to a further depth of 16ft., making a total depth from 200ft. level of 70ft. 6in. I have also driven 15ft. 6in. at the 250ft. level or crosscut; 10ft. of this drive is in good lode matter. The present contractors of the shaft have finished their contract in sinking to-day. I have let the contract again to the same party of men to sink a further depth of 50ft.

The Ford's Creek Antimony-mining Syndicate Company, Limited, near Gulgong, November 3.—No. 1 shaft: Drive has been extended 11ft., total 29ft.; have struck good ore at bottom of shaft. It is here about 7ft. wide; there will be a large body of ore here, and easily got up. Have had to sink a ventilating shaft, which acts well. Have about 10 tons of first-class ore ready for bagging.

Royal Standard North Goldmine, Stewart's Brook, November 3.—Western drive continued further 13ft., total driven from shaft 19ft.; ground principally slate. Have two veins of quartzite running nearly flat. Tunnel extended 6ft., total 90ft. Ground slate and very hard.

Golden Gully South Gold-mining Company, No Liability, Ironbarks, November 3.—Contractors have sunk No. 1 shaft 12ft.; total from surface, 26ft.; country, slate. No. 2 Shaft: Crosscut extended 14ft.; total from shaft, 24ft.; country changing; small veins of quartz coming in.

Blossom Hill Gold mining Company, Limited, November 1.—No. 2 Tunnel: There is very little change since the last report, but in the main drive the bottom has dipped about 4ft., and the ground generally is more moist. The wash is about 2ft. thick, and carrying about the same proportion of gold. We are still working the side drive. We have not started to block out or break down, as we should get blocked up with washdirt, but will start to do so at the first sign of rain.

The Ophir Deep Lead Gold-mining Company, Limited, November 2.—I hope to have lifts down by Thursday next, and start pumping. The water will not take more than 36 hours to get out.

PRODUCE MARKET.—Tuesday.

This morning, at Darling Harbour auction sales, there was a limited attendance of the trade. A comparatively small supply of forage—six trucks—consisting entirely of new hay, came to hand, and were quitted under steady competition at yesterday's prices. The wood market was dull. At the wharfs but light consignments were received from Richmond and Hunter rivers and Southern ports. Trade was scarcely so active as yesterday, maize, butter, and pollard were dearer; other lines maintained late values. At Darling Harbour sales the following rates were realised:—

Wood.—Fairly large market. The demand was slack. Billet, 7s to 9s per ton; bundle, 7s 6d to 12s; foot, 8s to 11s 6d; bakers', 7s to 10s.

Hay.—Only six trucks of this season's hay received. Three of new wheaten in sheaves sold at 5s 11d to 6s 4d; two of green lucerne in truss, 5s; one in bales from Scone 5s 4d.

At the wharfs, the following were the wholesale quotations:—

Maize.—A firmer tone. Quoted 3s 3d to 3s 4d per bushel.

Oats.—Stocks firmly held. Feeding kinds, 2s 6d to 2s 8d per bushel; discoloured, from 2s 4d; milling, 2s 7d to 2s 9d.

Bran.—Worth 1s 3d per bushel.

Pollard.—Now quoted 11d per bushel.

Hay.—Small additional supplies this morning from the Hunter River. Prime well-saved green lucerne £5 per ton; other qualities, from £4.

Chaff.—Balances of stocks replenished from Victoria last night. Firm, £5 to £5 10s per ton; Adelaide, £5 5s to £6; exceptional lines, to £6 10s.

Onions.—Values ranged from £9 to £10 per ton.

Potatoes.—Market very lightly supplied. Good Ballarats quoted £9 to £10 per ton; picked-over lots, from £8; Circular Head, old stocks, £7 to £7 10s; New Zealand, £9; other kinds, from £7.

Butter.—Values have advanced. Factory-made from Illawarra districts, 1s to 1s 3d per lb. Dairy sorts, 10d to 1s; intercolonial packed, 10d.

Cheese.—Limited stocks. Colonial kinds worth 9½d to 10½d per lb.; New Zealand, 10d.

Bacon.—In fair demand. Hand-cured Southern, 6d to 8d per lb.; machine-cured, 5d to 7d; special brands to 7½d; heavy and rough, 2d to 3d; roll bacon, 8d to 9d; hams, 6d to 9d. New Zealand, 9d to 9½d; hams, 1s.

Lard.—Values of best, in bladders, ranged from 4½d to 5½d per lb.; bulk, 3d to 3½d.

Eggs.—Moderate supplies. Unaltered, 11d to 1s per dozen.

Poultry.—All varieties, except ducks, were in fair inquiry. Fowls, 3s to 4s 6d per pair; ducks, 3s 3d to 4s 6d; geese, 5s 6d to 7s 6d; turkeys, 7s to 13s 6d.

LEATHER AND SKIN SALES.

At yesterday's auction leather sales the business transacted was on a very limited scale. Harrison, Jones, and Devlin, Limited, report that good light lines of tweed commanded attention, but other sorts remain very quiet. Rather small catalogues of sheepskins were submitted to a full attendance of buyers. A strong demand prevailed at prices fully equal to the high figures lately obtained. Messrs. Hill, Clark, and Co., Goldsbrough, Mort, and Co., Limited, Harrison, Jones, and Devlin, Limited, and Brunker and Wolfe report sales:—Quotations: Best butchers' lots, 5½d to 6½d; superior full-woolled skins to 8½d; good, 4½d to 5½d; fair, 2½d to 3½d; short and faulty, from 18d; pelts, best 12d to 18d; other kinds, 4½d to 8d; lambskins, 11½d to 3½d; good dry skins, 4½d to 5½d per lb.; medium, 3d to 4d; short-woolled, 1d to 2½d; Sales of kangaroo and wallaby skins were also held. The market was unchanged. Messrs. F. L. Barker and J. H. Geddes and Co. report the clearances of catalogues. Extra large kangaroo, to 90s per dozen; large, 36s to 48s; medium, 20s to 3s; small, 9s to 18s; very small, 1s to 6s. Large scrub wallaby, to 1s; small, 2s to 6s; swamp, 4s to 10s; rock, 2s; wallaroo, 4s to 40s.

THE CENTENNIAL PARK NUISANCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—Perhaps you may have a spare corner in your journal to insert this endorsement of what appears in a letter of this day regarding the Centennial Park nuisance. The stench is something intolerable. It penetrates to every apartment. I know a gentleman who, not knowing where the smell came from, caused the floors to be torn up in search for dead rats. People would not be so apprehensive were it merely a question of unpleasantness; but this stench is more than unpleasant. Naples is the hotbed of cholera because of bad odours; and this was foremost among the causes of the terrible plague which in 1630 swept off 140,000 inhabitants of Milan. When the wind blows from the park it carries with it, off heaps of putrifying matter, innumerable swarms of flies, which "rush" the houses in and about Paddington, and lodge in scores on the eatables, depositing thereon disease germs. This danger increases as the summer approaches. Trusting that, if the authorities refuse to "lend their ears," they will visit the park and dilate their nostrils awhile, and thus be convinced of the magnitude of the evil.

"Ay, marry, now unmuzzle your wisdom."—ROSALIND.

Whether the freetrade population of the colony is increasing faster than the protectionist, or vice versa, is a point on which the Government Statist does not, perhaps cannot, enlighten us. But it seems to me that the number of fiscal Opportunists—of men who, for philosophic or other sufficient reasons wear wool on one side of their bodies and hair on the other, in order to correspond with the metamorphoses of their political drovers—is increasing rather rapidly. If this be so, what wonder? Consider our politicians for a moment—the Ins and the Outs—the Actual, the Potential, the Optative, and the Impossible. When are they ever wearied whilst inculcating the doctrine that national prosperity is determined by the ascendancy for the time being of what they describe as "sound fiscal principles?" One section preaches that there can be no salvation for us except through free trade, while the rival section drums into our ears that by protection and through the Custom-House alone can we ever expect to reach the Promised Land. And issue is joined upon the pleadings, and we are treated to volumes of declamation, to miles of "statistics," and to arguments and inferences founded thereon, the most perplexing, ambiguous, treacherous, and contradictory. When we are all supposed to be sufficiently deafened, stunned, and bewildered, the mustering takes place, and the voting camps are put on. Then as many of us as can be mustered are driven into this or that paddock and counted—so many sheep; so many goats. But at every muster the number of abstainers—that is to say, of the "goat-sheep,"—increases, and furnishes a significant answer to the good people who so regularly ask—What can have become of the sheep? Why didn't the goats roll up?

Mr. David Brown, in his last letter to the Herald on "The West and the Land Law," although in the first part of it he did not much encourage those who think that the Compensation for Improvement problem will stand much thinking about, yet when he warmed to his subject gave us what was evidently the result of some severe thinking. No doubt the thinking was the thinking of an expert; and in that aspect the danger of chaotic or doctrinaire thought may not come in. But with all respect to "expert" opinion on a subject which is surrounded by difficulties, some of which are not soluble by experts alone, and not unmindful of the risk I run of being angrily told by "practical" men to "come off the grass," I venture to ask whether we are not already in a position to give short answers to the following questions:—1. Is there any overwhelming reason—agrarian, economic, or political—why the privileges which have been either granted or confirmed to English and Irish tenants by the Agricultural Holdings Acts, and the Irish Land Acts, the admission, I mean, of a vested right to substantial improvements made by themselves on the landlord's soil, should be withheld from Crown tenants in New South Wales? 2. If there is no such overwhelming reason contra, will it be best for the landlord to pay the assessed value of such improvements to the outgoing tenant, taking in return a charge on the land, as is done in England, and raising the rent to the next incoming tenant; or should the improving tenant be left to get the value of his improvements from the incoming tenant, the land being made a security, so far as it legally can, for the payment of that value to the improving outgoing tenant? Or is there not a safer and less expensive third course open to us? To value all "defined" improvements on Crown land, and having ascertained what in money they would represent if taken over by an incoming tenant, convert that money value into (a) either an equivalent term of years to be added to the current lease; or (b) an addition by way of lease of so much of the land held by the claimant under occupation license, and for such a term as would fairly represent the money value of such improvements—or use both equivalents. The position between the improving Crown tenant and the State, his landlord, I take to be this, that the former has an equity to compensation which can be valued, and the latter possesses in the reversionary interest it has both in the land leased and the land licensed, the wherewithal to pay that compensation, otherwise than in hard cash. As to the scheme of giving the improving tenant a sort of Ulster right, claimable only as against the incoming tenant, I [illegible] always regarded that solution of the compensation [illegible] as unsatisfactory. In most cases the security which the outgoing tenant could obtain for the payment only of the compensation awarded would be in the nature of a second mortgage. In some cases the outgoing tenant might wait in vain for a willing purchaser of his improvements; and while he was waiting what would become of them? In Ireland a man could always get rid of his tenant right because there were always people ready in swarms to offer more for it than it was worth, or than they could afford to pay. But in this colony there is no such numerous class of bidders. The occupations of the people are more diverse, and earth-hunger for a Darling back block (however improved) is not likely to take the acute Irish form.

Let us hope—for hoping is at any time a cheap recreation—that these terrible sequences of dry, hot days, followed in many cases, to judge by the minimum points registered at some of the inland stations, by comparatively cold nights, are rapidly bringing on the climax, which means rain. Over almost the entire sweep of the Western slopes, and the Far West plains the thermometer has for days—I may almost say weeks—registered from 90° to 105° in the shade. To us who live within the range of the sea breezes, with an abundant water-supply for all purposes, with theatres, schools, and all the luxuries and necessities of life within easy reach, the life of a man who has been sentenced to the servitude of the back blocks would seem appalling if we could but appreciate the full meaning of a daily temperature exceeding 100° of Fahrenheit—coming after many months of drought. In another column of the newspapers we read of the shiftings of thousands upon thousands of sheep, of vast mobs of cattle travelling to the table lands; of lambings far below 80 per cent.; of ——. But the story of carnage and death is too horrible for any one to read except the men who still talk of the "bloated squatter" as of a man living on the fat of the land, rolling lazily to his club in a handsome carriage, and never visiting the shamefully underlet pastures which call him Lord. For these, half-idiots and half-rogues though they be, the "bloated squatter" must still live as a cherished ideal of the Gorgius Midas of New South Wales.

Last week I heard with very great pleasure that a movement was on foot to erect some fitting memorial of the late Mr. Dalley. I am not referring to the memorial proposed by the members of the Contingent, or to the stained-glass window in St. Mary's Cathedral, suggested so appropriately by Mr. Henry Austin, one of Mr. Dalley's executors; but to a commemorative work of art which would in some way express the large, and among many of us the passionate, admiration in which Mr. Dalley was held in the colony of his birth. It was, or it seemed to me, the general opinion, that a statue in bronze, placed in some commanding position—some thought in front of the Houses of Parliament—would not be an improper memorial. Others spoke of a marble statue, but forgot that there is no State House to put it in. Others, again, were in favour of giving architectural expression to the prevailing sense of public bereavement, and thought that the same monument might be a commemoration both of Mr. Dalley and of the despatch of the Contingent to Suakim. I don't think we are likely to have a more illustrious man than Mr. Dalley for a long time to come, and, therefore, I for one should be glad to see his place in our record of worthies marked in a manner and upon a scale which could not be mistaken. There is a spot in the Inner Domain which, a few years ago, before the Garden Palace was burnt down, might have been occupied by that bronze statue of the Queen which Mr. Dalley was in the habit of describing as "an imported excuse for Fenianism." The spot I am thinking of is now occupied by certain marble copies of Canova's best works, which would not be greatly missed. It is a glorious site for the architect, and there are not a few grand purposes to which it might be put. But I know of none more worthy of the ground than a monumental building designed so as to commemorate the crowning act of Mr. Dalley's life, and to serve as a fane for the marble statue, without which the building would not be complete. I suppose that such a memorial would be very costly. It might mean an outlay of from twenty to fifty thousand pounds. Will Mr. Dalley's "popularity" carry us so far? I don't ask the question as throwing a doubt on the enthusiasm of a young nation, but merely as a sort of rough test of its money value.

* * * * *

Let me take this offered opportunity of referring to a recent suggestion in this column concerning the editing of Mr. Dalley's Opinions. It seems to have been misapprehended by some of his literary friends, and so seriously misapprehended as to have produced the impression that the literary remains of Mr. Dalley were, in the opinion of the writer responsible for the suggestion, undeserving of collection. Now, as it has been well known for some time that Mr. Dalley's best speeches and contributions to the Herald, Punch, and other papers would be collected and edited as soon as arrangements could be completed by Mr. Dalley's representatives, the principle of expressio unius exclusio alterius is altogether inapplicable, and the scant appreciation of Mr. Dalley's oratorical and literary side, supposed to be implied by the suggestion in question, is an absurd phantasma.

* * * * *

Not having the honour to belong to the Church of Mr. Dalley I am unable to see, with Mr. T. C. O'Mara, the particular heinousness of Mr. Henry Austin's suggestion of the stained glass memorial window. I read Mr. Austin's letter, indeed, without noticing that he "jauntily makes the memory of Mr. Dalley his own special and particular charge," or did so with "an imperious stroke of the pen." Mr. Austin's letter seemed to me a short business-like production, such as would be likely to come from the pen of a person like Mr. Austin. But with regard to Mr. O'Mara's letter, I feel pretty sure, that most people who read it will think it quite unnecessarily acrid, and some may conjecture not unreasonably that certain accumulations of acridity secreted by Mr. O'Mara have been, by some mischance, vented on Mr. Austin instead of Sir Henry Parkes.

"Ambulator's" letter on local option shows that he is a sturdy disciple of Herbert Spencer. He goes straight at both the principle and the method of local option, and writes with a strong grasp of his subject. To a man of his way of arguing it will be of no use to cite the hundreds of intelligent and patriotic men, from Sir Wilfrid Lawson down to Mr. W. M'Millan (the latest convert), who have found themselves compelled to take the cross of local option. No doubt, many of these "converts" have embraced the true faith with various, sometimes with considerable, reservations. As to the Parliamentary Opportunist who declares himself a local optionist on the eve of a contested election, we need not be hard upon him and the like of him. We know intuitively that he will bark with Mr. Knapp and Mr. Boyce, and 10 minutes afterwards will be found in bibulous confabulation with a favourite publican. Still, after making due allowance and rebate for these contiguous local optionists, there yet remains a phalanx of more or less great and influential people who are content to carry this queer trade-mark of local option as a political label throughout their lives. Do they act thus, as knowing that full local option is not a thing for their generation—that "it is a question not for an age, but for all time?" Just as men take long building leases without providing for a release from the covenant to pay rent in case the Day of Judgment occurs during the currency of the term.

Is the "(S) Centennial" Park, after all the blessings and the visitations it has received from Governors and Prime Ministers and distinguished gad-about, to be debased now that its novelty has worn off, and there is to be no State House within its precincts, into a great dust and rubbish bin for the city and suburbs, and to be known and dreaded hereafter as the chief ordure depot of the metropolis? The statements which have recently appeared in the newspapers reveal an outrageous, nay, a criminal, disregard to the health and the comfort of the surrounding inhabitants; and it is a strange wind that does not sicken some of them by the fearful odours that are wafted from the deposits laid on the surface of the park, and left there with true official nonchalance to poison by square miles the breath of Heaven. But these statements, exaggerated as they may seem, are, I am credibly informed by my own organs of sight and smell, no more than the simple truth. One can hardly bring oneself to realise the supreme idiotcy of the management which, with millions of tons of sand at hand, neglects to cover these sickening deposits.

THE VICTORIAN INTERNATIONAL REGATTA CARNIVAL.

Mr. A. G. Milson's yacht Era, in charge of Captain Bushnell, which left here on Monday afternoon for Melbourne to compete at the Victorian International Regatta Carnival, to be held there on November 23 and 24, returned to port the same evening disabled, as briefly reported in our issue of yesterday. The yacht, on clearing the Heads, was making good pace of it, with a nice, steady north-easter behind her, when suddenly, off Coogee Bay, an accident happened to the gaff; the ironwork of the jaws where the neck is welted on to the cheeks gave way, and this caused her return to the moorings shortly after 6 o'clock. The crew then set about looking for a new gaff, and having got hold of a pleasure boom of the Waitangi's, went to work and made a gaff of that, which took them the best part of the night, the work being somewhat difficult, as the ironwork would not fit. However, yesterday morning everything was in readiness for her departure again, when Captain Bushnell, who felt quite done up after the night's work, acquainted Mr. Milson with the fact that in his present state of health he did not feel capable of taking charge of the vessel, and that gentleman has succeeded in getting the chief officer of the ship Gretna, at the Circular Quay (Mr. Paterson) to take charge of the yacht during her voyage to Melbourne. One of Mr. Milson's men suddenly disappeared yesterday morning, and has not since been seen or heard of, so another one has been taken on in his place. Everything being now in readiness, the yacht may be expected to leave to-day, should the weather be deemed fit; but should the southerly weather continue, it will no doubt prevent her departure.

The owners of a number of half-decked and open boats of the harbour have signified their intention of taking their boats down by steamer to compete in the races of their class at the regatta, among which are—Genesta, 20ft. half-decker, owned by Mr. C. Cameron; Ellie, 22ft. open boat, belonging to Mr. J. M'Murtrie; Mr. W. M. Paul's 22ft. half-decker Varuna; and Mr. H. Carpenter's 20ft. half-decker, Itonia. The Genesta and Ellie will be sailed by Messrs. Ellis and Fletcher respectively, and the other two boats will have their respective owners at the tiller. The races in which these boats will be eligible to compete in are as follows:—Keel or centre-plate yachts exceeding 20ft., and not exceeding 23ft., crews limited to six hands, and course about 12 miles; keel or centre-plate yachts or boats 20ft. and under, crews limited to five hands, and course about 12 miles; half-decked, keel, or centre-plate sailing boats, not exceeding 24ft. in length, course about 12 miles, and for this event there is no restriction to crews. It might be pointed out that in the programme adopted at a general meeting of the committee, held on the 21st August last, and circulated among the yacht and boat owners of the colonies, a note appeared at the foot, stating that there would be no restriction as to crews; but in the latest programme of events which reached here a day or two ago, the crews in most of the races are limited, such as in the club races held in our waters. Most of our boat-owners are not aware of this, and in one instance, namely, that of the Itonia, the owner informs us that he has made arrangements to take as many as ten hands down to sail in his boat, and had already arranged about berths in the steamer for them, thinking of course that there would be no restriction whatever to crews. As sailing in Hobson's Bay is almost identical to that of outside Sydney harbour, it seems quite a farce to restrict the crews, much more so to such a limited number as has been done by the Victorian Regatta Committee. It is now considered doubtful whether all the boats named will go down, more especially when they hear of the restrictions to the number of the crew. It is a great pity that this matter was not made public sooner, and it is almost too late now to have any chance of impressing upon the committee the necessity of altering it.

RELIGIOUS SERVICES.

Services in celebration of the thirty-second anniversary of the Newtown Congregational Church, and the tenth year of the pastorate of the Rev. Warlow Davies, were held on Sunday, when sermons were preached by Mr. Henry Lee, the Rev. J. J. Halley, and the Rev. Dr Hannay, in the morning, afternoon, and evening respectively. On Tuesday evening a largely attended tea-meeting was followed by a public meeting. The Rev. Warlow Davies, M.A., pastor of the church, presided over a good congregation. The pastor gave an encouraging review of his ten years' ministry, in which he stated that during that period £13,700 had been raised for all purposes. The Sunday school contained 700 scholars, and the various institutions were flourishing. Addresses were delivered by the Revs. T. E. Owens Mell, J. Robertson, M.A., Dr. Roseby, and Dr. Jefferis. The choir rendered several anthems in a creditable manner.

The annual report of the Registrar-General for Ireland tells (says the Pall Mall Gazette) the old story of a continued decrease in the population of that unhappy country. Its total population in 1887 did not exceed 4,837,313, or only a few thousands more than that of London. The birth rate was the lowest on record, being only one in 43 of the population. The death rate was 18·3 per thousand, or one-tenth under the average for the previous ten years.

IN THE HOUSE.

It is time the plan was adopted of meeting and adjourning—better still of not meeting at all—on Cup day. The attempt to legislate while the air is full of fives or sevens to one is pathetic. There is no mockery more cruel than that of placing a matter-of-fact business paper before a person whose heart is on the Flemington lawn—whose thoughts are on the favourite. Outside Beach's, King and Pitt streets junction, the crush grew greater as the hour approached for the Parliament of New South Wales to assemble. From a subdued whisper of "six to one on the field" in the forenoon the turmoil grew till, shortly after 3 p.m., men with nickel-guards and check trousers stood boldly out and offered to give or take the odds—they were'nt particular. This just shows you what a crowd means. At 11 a.m. for instance, and right up to 3 p.m., these people—the bookmakers, of course—sang small, moved demonstratively out of the way when a constable came along, and appeared, on the whole, a singularly law-abiding class. But directly the excitement grew, directly men began to shoulder each other in the street, and women to walk into the middle of the roadway, these people with their strong chains (would they were stronger) and flash pins, froze to the pavement.

* * * * *

The House had scarcely met when the Treasurer explained himself. Compared with October last year, or with any October since New South Wales was suffered to go alone, the revenue was immense. At this point Mr. Abbott—the stormy petrel of financial debate—arose to say that of all the engaging characteristics of New South Wales Treasurers, the most engaging was the being always late. While financiers in neighbouring colonies could always be depended on to present their balance-sheets at once when the month, the quarter, or the year ended, it had always been the privilege of the mother colony to let a week or so go by before accounts were rendered. In fairness it must be said that for once the Wentworth member was entirely in the right. There must be some reason why in this colony returns are always some days behind; why at public libraries hundreds of works on any given subject are always at hand except the precise work you want; why in Parliament every question is answered with a careful attention to details except the very question to which you are desirous of getting a definite reply

* * * * *

Mr. Melville thought it but fair that if statements showing increased revenue were read to the House those showing a falling-off in the national income should be read as well. The worst of the member for Northumberland is that when he gets on his feet he endeavours to be epigrammatic and, occasionally, blistering. This is a mistake. Of all writers the one whose pages you feel most ready to skip is he who lays himself out for epigram and antithesis. That is why Pope, with all his infinite wit and familiarity with numbers, wearies one. Just the same with a speaker. Directly you find he is bent on being epigrammatic and antithetical, you get your back up at once. What Mr. Melville was specially anxious to know was why Sergeant Brennan and 18 policemen should call at a lady's house for the purpose of knowing where her son was. It must in justice be confessed that the principle of knocking-up a middle-aged parent at 3 a.m. for the purpose of eliciting from her where her 20-year-old son is to be found is fundamentally vicious. In all likelihood she doesn't know. Besides, if she did, she wouldn't tell you. The boy, too, in all probability kept his movements to himself. Then again—but the stupidity will have suggested itself to you long before this—the stupidity of supposing that even Sergeant Brennan and 18 peace officers, or 1800 if you will, could obtain from a woman where her son was if she didn't want to tell you.

* * * * *

While this was going on the Premier was having a comfortable tête-a-tête with Mr. Wise, and, judging by the satisfaction on the Colonial Secretary's face, he benefited by the chat. It was the South Sydney member's belief that the practice of printing documents which no one reads was an error. So it is. When one considers the time that has been wasted and the money spent on publishing returns that nobody ever looks at twice, and few once, the conviction forces itself upon one that the custom of demanding returns would stand a deal of pruning.

* * * * *

Mr. Thompson, while expressing a sincere admiration for the person and peculiarities of Mr. Melville, was quite unable to see why documents which all neglected were printed, published, and paid for by the public. Mr. Wall hoped the time would never come when printed returns demanded by the people's representatives would be refused. Mr. Neild was bent on knowing why the Centennial Park was so malodorous—why, in fact, people were suffered to heave there all the decomposing protoplasm of various thickly-populated suburbs. At 5.35, Mr. Garvan moved an adjournment for the purpose of explaining his action regarding land sales. Long before dinner-hour the belief became pretty general that the member for Eden would be entertaining enough to clear the House before the 6 o'clock bell rang. It is not often that Mr. Garvan succeeds in clearing the floor. Indeed, it is customarily the other way, as his views have generally sufficient body or stamina to induce members to remain. Last night, however, was an exception, and so, when the Speaker expressed his desire to leave the chair for dinner there were none to be found to regret that, so far as Eden was involved, there was another, and if anything, more disastrous fall.

* * * * *

Up to 10.45 p.m. the debate went on. Then Mr. Garvan's motion gave out, and after a few words from the Premier the subject was shelved. By the time the matter was brought to a close the appearance of the house was pitiable. In the gallery about half-a-dozen enthusiasts looked as if constitutional government was good but sleep better. In the stalls—i.e., under the gallery, and just behind the Sergeant-at-Arms—there were but two, both sedate, both bald. The question, of course, arises whether, if not bald, they would be sedate; or whether, if not sedate they would be—— But questions of this kind become intricate. Mr. Haynes, at 10.53, was seen to be cynically observant in front, while the person just behind him was stretched at full length, dreaming no doubt of droughts, and democracy. There was a slight passage at arms regarding the exact meaning of Mr. Oliver's letter (published in the papers), but the upshot was that the person who wrote the letter in question knew what he had to say, and said it. Ultimately, when the motion for adjournment was lost, and when zealous-looking men trooped in from street and coffee-room, the verdict from the press gallery was that, having frittered away the sitting for six honest hours, they might have gone just a foot further and left off for the night.

MR. GEORGE CLARKE AND HIS MISSION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—I see in your issue of to-day's date that you say—"Mr. George Clarke, known as the Christian Athlete, is to hold meetings," &c. Now, sir, I know you would not willingly hurt a visitor's feelings and do him an injury. I therefore ask a small space in your next issue to correct this error. I am not known as "The Christian Athlete," nor do I wish to be so known. I have received this name here through the mistaken zeal of my friends, only because I have, amongst many other lectures, one entitled "The Christian Athlete," simply using my experience in the athletic world as an illustration to point to the greatest facts that man can know. I am not, and never have been, a great athlete, simply one of thousands of young men who have trained for races on the cinder track. To call me "The Christian Athlete" simply because I have done a little in the athletic world, and because I have a lecture thus called, is as ridiculous as it would be to give me a name from another popular lecture I have, entitled "A Bundle of Rags to a Piece of Paper." "George Clarke, the Bundle of Rags," would be as appropriate and as theatrical as the other, for, as with all other men, I suppose I sometimes have worn clothes rather ragged, just as I have engaged in manly sports like most other men.

I trust you will help me by inserting this letter to remove what is very distasteful to me, viz., the name "The Christian Athlete." I have come to your splendid colony, not to puff the little I have done, but to tell what I believe to be really good news of a power given to men by God to overcome their moral helplessness, and to enable them to combat the evil forces by which they are assailed from within their own nature, as well as to successfully combat and resist the forces which are outside of them, dragging them down when they want to rise.

I am, &c.,

November 6. GEORGE CLARKE

THE NEWCASTLE COLLIERIES STRIKE.

MEETINGS OF MINERS.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]
(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

NEWCASTLE, TUESDAY.

The Wallsend miners held a meeting last night. There was a large attendance. The principal matter under discussion was the new general agreement, which was read and explained clause by clause by the chairman, Mr. John Hamilton. The question of jerry was then considered. The delegate at the conference, Mr. C. Johnson, was present, and fully explained that Mr. Binney had clearly and distinctly stated that in future they would not work jerry above 12in. in thickness, and there was not the slightest reason to doubt that gentleman's word. Mr. Fletcher had also given the delegate from the Co-operative Colliery a guarantee that no six-yard bords would be worked any more at that colliery. One speaker, Mr. Briggs, thought these things should have been stated in the general agreement. The chairman explained that these were matters to be settled by local agreement, which were provided for in the printed general agreement. The delegate, Mr. Johnson, said that the words of Messrs. Fletcher and Binney were quite sufficient. Mr Waller said it would be easy to get written guarantees if those were wanted. A speaker asked if there was to be an aggregate meeting held before a ballot was taken for or against accepting the general agreement. The delegate replied in the negative, and then read a motion from the delegate board that a ballot be taken not later than Wednesday, all returns to be sent in from the different lodges by Thursday morning, thus dispensing with an aggregate meeting as not being necessary. The motion for a ballot was carried by a large majority on a show of hands. A division was called for and agreed to, but there was such a large number in favour of the ballot that no count was required, and it was decided that a ballot should take place on Wednesday in the Horticultural Society's Hall, Wallsend, from 10 a.m. till 2 p.m.

The Co-operative miners held a meeting last night, and the proceedings were similar to those at the Wallsend miners' meeting. It was agreed to take a ballot on Wednesday from 10 a.m. till 1 p.m. at the Mechanics' Institute, Plattsburg. The general opinion is that the general agreement will be carried by a large majority. On every side Mr. Fletcher's name is spoken of in the highest praise for the part he has taken in the conference. He is regarded as being the principal cause of bringing about the favourable agreement.

The A. A. Company's miners met this morning to discuss the agreement. With regard to clause 1, some speakers thought the associated miners should have a voice in the selling price of coal as well as the masters. Others thought the delegates had gone too far in saying that the miners wanted no rise. The agreement did not deal with the Borehole pit alone, but with the whole of the associated collieries in the district. They should look to their neighbours. The question to consider was, How would the agreement affect the district? The agreement was discussed as far as clause 5. It was then proposed to adjourn till 10 o'clock to-morrow. In reply to a question, the delegate stated that he had forgotten how he voted as to whether acceptance of the agreement should be decided by ballot to-morrow or not. The meeting then adjourned.

The miners of the Hetton Colliery met this morning and went through the agreement, and resolved that, in their opinion, an aggregate meeting should have been called to consider the agreement. Although the agreement will be better for them, yet they believe that the majority of miners will not be benefited. The ballot takes place to morrow at Smith's Hotel, Carrington. The local director of the Burwood mine has sent the following note to the Burwood delegate:—"It is not intended by the Burwood management to make any alteration in the mode of working the seam, and it will for the future be worked above morgan."

MIDNIGHT.

The Stockton miners held a meeting to-night, when the agreement was discussed in detail. It was decided to take a ballot to-morrow. From the tenor of the meeting it is anticipated that the result will be the rejection of the agreement.

TRADES MOVEMENTS.

THE CARPENTERS' STRIKE.

A meeting of the committee of the Builders and Contractors' Association was held at the Builders' Exchange last evening, Mr. R. D. Sime (president) in the chair. The following communication was received:—"Federated Building Trades Council of New South Wales, Sydney. November 5, 1888. To E. Dyer, Esq., Sydney Master Builders' Association, Sydney. Sir,—The above council having received a request from the carpenters and joiners of Sydney district to endeavour to arrange terms for the settlement of the present dispute between the workmen of that trade and their employers, the council, having full power to act on behalf of the workmen, instructed me to inform your association that they have elected six members of the council for that purpose. They respectfully request that your association will elect or appoint an equal number of your body similarly authorised to meet with a view to the settlement of the dispute as early as possible. If this request should be complied with, an intimation of time and place of meeting most convenient to your representatives will receive prompt attention.—Yours truly, THOS BANISTER, Secretary, Cromwell-street, Croydon." It was resolved to refer the communication to Messrs. M'Intyre and E. Dyer, who had acted as chairman and secretary respectively in connection with the master carpenters and joiners of the Association. Major Parrott, who was present, addressed the meeting on the subject of the defences of the colony, with a view of interesting the members of the Association in regard to the matter. It was decided to invite Major Parrott to attend the regular monthly meeting of the Association in January next. After the committee had adjourned an informal meeting of master carpenters and joiners was held in regard to the above communication from the Federated Building Trades Council. It was decided to call a meeting of master carpenters for Thursday next, at 11 a.m., to discuss the subject proposed by the council.

A meeting of the Trolly and Draymen's Union was held last evening at the Maritime Hall, Sussex-street. Mr. A. J. Kelly (president) presided as chairman. The meeting unanimously decided to affiliate with the Maritime Council, and Messrs. Kelly, Smith, and Maley were elected as delegates to represent the union on the council. The recent strike in connection with the City Carrying Company was brought up for discussion. It was resolved that members of the union who declined to act in accordance with the rules of the society should be expelled from the union. It was announced that the assistant secretary had remained at work when called upon to act in accordance with the union rules, and his resignation having been tendered, was accepted by the meeting. Mr. E. Dunn was elected to fill the vacancy. A levy of 6d. per member was then struck towards the support of the members of the union now out on strike, and it was decided to send lists around to the different yards for the purpose of facilitating the collection of the strike money voted.

LOCAL OPTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—"Ambulator" has mistaken our ground of controversy. As local optionists we do not "claim the right of enforcing our good on others." We do claim the right of defending ourselves from the evils forced on us by others. The two positions are essentially different This being understood, nearly the whole of your correspondent's letter is answered. Again, "Ambulator" warns against the evils arising from depending on Governments, or as he terms it, "State Aid." He says, "If trained to look to some distinct body for assistance, it (the nation) will never develop a capacity for self-help." Just so. If your correspondent will study the local-option question more closely, he will see that this is our position. Local option is local self government. Nothing more, nothing less. The present licensing system presents a "distinct body," the licensing boards, to which it compels the people "to look for assistance." Against this we protest. The inherent defect dreaded by "Ambulator" exists in the licensing system, not in local option. Here, again, I venture to submit that the eloquent passages about ancient abuses, Sulis, &c., are all answered, or rather, may be taken as pleading for our principle. It would be interesting to know what "other causes" produce "equally grave effects" with the liquor traffic. In my former letter I indicated the effects it produces, and am prepared with indisputable proof for every assertion. I neither know the causes nor the grave effects to which your correspondent alludes, and shall be glad if he will state them. Another error seems to lie in the assertion that local optionists "aim solely at the amelioration of man's moral nature." This is not so. They do aim at the amelioration of man's moral nature, but not solely. They aim at the elevation of his social condition, the increase of his material wealth, the broadening of his civic and political power, and the development and preservation of his physical health. They aim at freeing the country from crime and immorality; but they also aim at the destruction of poverty, the relief of taxation, the cessation of unnatural and oppressive charges on the national and municipal exchequers, and the tearing in tatters of a wretched rag of feudalism, one of the last remnants of a buried past whereby the lawful and natural right of self-help is handed over to an irresponsible and privileged class, appointed by political patronage and not elected by popular suffrage.

I am, &c.,

November 6. NICHOLAS B. DOWNING,
General Secretary L. O. League, N.S.W.

POSTAL ECCENTRICITIES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—I notice in your columns this morning a letter signed "A. H. Lawson," calling attention to the delay he has experienced in receiving a letter said to have been posted to him. That these delays do not always arise from misdirection I can prove. On the 7th of last August I posted a letter to a friend in Adelaide. Last Saturday I received a reply to that letter, which had been delivered in Adelaide on the 26th of last month, having travelled to England and back in the time. I enclose the envelope, from which you will see that the address could not well be plainer.

I am, &c.,

DISGUSTED.

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

THE TURF.

The V. R. C. Spring Meeting was continued at Flemington yesterday, in the presence of the largest gathering ever seen on that popular sporting resort. Fine weather prevailed, and the sport was both interesting and exciting. Though the great betting race of 1888 was secured by a Victorian-bred horse, the New South Wales representatives managed to secure a couple of events, the Kirkham youngsters, Pippo and Rudolph, having carried the blue and white to victory in the Kensington Stakes and Nursery Handicap respectively. How the great equine contests were lost and won is fully described by "Nemo" in another part of this issue.

Nominators for the V.R.C. Oaks are reminded that the final forfeit is due at 11 a.m. to-day, and that all horses not scratched by that hour will be held responsible for the whole of the stake.

The Louth races commence to-morrow, and will be continued and concluded on Thursday.

Racing men who intend to have a cut in for the good things provided by the Murrumburrah Turf Club, should note that the general entry for the spring meeting, which takes place on the 15th instant, closes at 4 p.m. to-morrow, when the following events will need attention:—Flying Handicap of 10 sovs., ¾ mile; Harden Handicap of 15 sovs., one mile; Ladies' Bracelet, a trophy value 10 sovs., once round and a distance; and District Purse, a handicap of 10 sovs., mile. The entrance for each event amounts to 5 per cent. of the stake. It should also be borne in mind that the acceptances for the Birthday Handicap are due at 4 p.m. to-morrow.

The sporting community generally will learn with regret that Mr. G. B. Rowley, the popular secretary of the Rosehill Racing Club, has been confined to his room since Saturday last suffering from a bad leg, which has been giving him some trouble of late.

Wilbertree was withdrawn from all engagements in connection with the Rosehill November meeting yesterday.

The Colly Blue (Northern district) racing authorities held their annual re-union on the 1st instant, when the attendance was small, and the pleasure was marred by a great hailstorm. Zany, by Old England, won Opening and Colly Blue handicaps. Gus won the Flying Handicaps; the Hack Race was appropriated by The Cutter, and the Forced Handicap by Rookwood.

CLARENCE TATTERSALL'S CLUB.

GRAFTON, TUESDAY.

The following sires have been nominated for the Clarence Tattersall's ninth Sires' Produce Stakes:—Smith's Anteros and Clayton, Town's Cheviot and Sardonyx, Small's Mountebank, Irving's First Water, Small's Stockdale, Barnes' July, Kelly's Aneroid, Hetherington's Ad Valorem, Smith's Merlin, Hawthorne's Prince Imperial, Bundock's Excelsior, Coleman's Prodigal, Exton's Sir Alfred, Pochins' St. Oswald.

ANOTHER CANDIDATE FOR ROWING HONOURS.

GRAFTON, TUESDAY.

A light skiff race was rowed on the Lower Clarence between A. Baker and R. Brown, and was won easily by Brown, who says he is going to Sydney to undergo a thorough course of training. He is a well-made fellow, with plenty of stamina, and one of the most determined men that ever sat in a boat. Good authorities believe that he could be schooled to defeat either Beach, Kemp, or Hanlan. The success of Searle and Brown will cause several young scullers to persevere, as it is generally admitted here that Searle is by no means phenomenal.

Brewster heads the list with 111, an excellent performance. Donnan (with 65) and Robinson (30, not out) showed good cricket. Newell, Kelly, and Bennett also obtained double figures. Frazer and C. The following matches were played on Saturday:—

Redfern Cambridge, three wickets for 32. Mitchelson and M'Elhenny did good service with the bat for the Redfern Cambridge, and Richardson and Chaafe did the trundling for them, as Trenbath did for the Lismores.

St. Leonards Literary and Debating Society's C. C. and Strathfield played at Holtermann's Tower, and the match was won easily by the former. Scores: Debating Society, 156 (Sinclair 54 not out, Dind 32); Strathfield, 45 (Rogers 15). Sinclair and Dind divided the wickets for the winners. Rogers took three wickets for the losers. The former team played with eight, and the latter with nine men.

Eton College played Orwell, and the match was won easily by the Collegians. Scores: Orwell, 66 (Hardie 22); Collegians, 143 for three wickets (Gibb not out 38, Sawyer not out 58, Allen 14). Lightbottom was the most effective bowler for the Collegians.

PEDESTRIANISM.

Pedestrians are reminded, by advertisement elsewhere, that the acceptances for the Carrington Prince of Wales' Birthday Handicap close to-night, at 8 o'clock, with the secretary, at the ground.

CYCLING.

The picnic held last Saturday by the members of the Suburban B. C. was a pronounced success. The members, their friends, and some representatives of other cycling clubs, numbering about 80, went out by train to Rockdale, and thence by tram to Lady Robinson's Beach. The guests passed the afternoon in a pleasant manner, and at 5 p.m. tea was served in the large dining-room of the hotel. The company then adjourned to the pavilion, which the committee had secured for skating and dancing. The captain of the club had arranged a programme of dances, which kept things going merrily until 10 p.m., when the whole party started home, having thoroughly enjoyed the outing.

AQUATICS.

NEW SOUTH WALES ROWING ASSOCIATION.

A meeting of the New South Wales Rowing Association was held at Aarons' Exchange Hotel last evening. Mr. Cubitt being in the chair. There was a good attendance. A letter was received from Mr. Fred. Walsh, asking whether it would not be possible to have the Leichhardt Rowing Club, the Balmain Working-men's Rowing Club, and others of the community represented at the conference which will be held at a future date to settle the definition of a rowing amateur. It was decided to lay the letter before the conference. A communication was received from the Marine Board, stating that any two steamers named by the association would be authorised to follow the races to be held under the auspices of that body—the intercolonial eight-oared and the four-oared events. In response to a communication from the hon. secretary of the Brisbane aquatic carnival it was decided to inform that gentleman that there was no chance of the association sending a four-oared crew to compete in the international contest to be held on the Brisbane River in December next. It was further resolved to inform the secretary of the carnival that it was possible some of the Sydney clubs might take part in the race. If so the association would probably extend its patronage to the crew or crews. Mr. A. Biss, of Wellington, New Zealand, wrote nominating the following crew for the amateur four-oared race to be held on the Parramatta:—A. L. Smith (stroke), H. F. Nicoll (3), T. A. Styche (2), and A. M. Boulton, bow. Stroke, three, and bow are members of the Canterbury Rowing Club; number two belongs to the Napier Rowing Club—both being amateur clubs belonging to the New Zealand Association. The following entry was received from the Tamar Rowing Club, Tasmania: H. J. Hudson (bow), 10st. 6lb.; J. F. Deane (2), 12st. 3lb.; J. Coogan (3), 11st. 7lb.; G. Cragg (stroke), 11st. 3lb.; T. Keon, (cox). The New Zealand, Tasmanian, Victorian, and New South Wales entries for the forthcoming amateur four-oared race were accepted, subject to the crews being amateurs according to the definition of the New South Wales Rowing Association. It was decided to hold a special meeting on the 20th instant, to consider and arrange for the Association regatta, and the champion amateur sculls race. Entries for both events will be received on the date named. It was announced that Mr. T. P. M'Dermott (representing the Sydney Rowing Club) had been appointed delegate to the association, vice Mr. J. A. Brodie, resigned. Mr. M'Dermott was received, and took his seat. It was stated that the Victorian "eight" would be franked over the New South Wales railways. The crew will likewise be welcomed by the Mayor of Sydney and the New South Wales Rowing Association. Mr. P. Sullivan, hon. treasurer, drew the attention of the members to the fact that the funds were in a very low condition, £50 of the overdraft—the limit being £100—having been drawn from the Commercial Bank. He also stated that Mr. C. Bros, the late treasurer, had neglected to hand over the books of accounts, &c. It was resolved that Mr. Cubitt, Mr. Sullivan, and Mr. Goodyear (hon. secretary), should interview Mr. Bros in connection with this matter, and these gentlemen were empowered to act on behalf of the association. Mr. A. Goodyear, the selector, then reported the names of the eight as the crew stands at present:—F. Bellbridge, stroke, Balmain R. C.; J. Collins, No. 7, Balmain R. C.; C. M. Garrard, No. 6, Glebe R. C.; J. Carleton, No. 5, St. Ignatius College R. C.; W. C. Macdonald, No. 4, Mercantile Rowing Club; W. Bellbridge, No. 3, Balmain R. C.; F. Hooker, No. 2, Balmain R. C.; C. Wilson, bow, Glebe R. C.; with R. L. Thompson, Balmain R. C., as emergency. Various complimentary remarks were passed about the improvement visible in the eight, and the selector said the men were working hard and doing their best to become proficient in their duties. It was resolved that a conference of the representatives of the various rowing associations in the colonies be held in Sydney at the end of this month to consider the amateur definition and frame general rules to govern intercolonial races. Each rowing association will have power to appoint three delegates to the conference. Messrs. P. H. Sullivan, John Blackman, and E. P. Simpson were authorised to represent the New South Wales Rowing Association. Some other business having been transacted, the meeting terminated.

THE NEW SOUTH WALES EIGHT.

The eight-oared crew to represent this colony on the 24th instant has been in daily work on the waters of Iron Cove under the care of the honorary coach, Mr. A. Goodyear. The improvement in form has been general throughout the boat. The catch is now much better in every respect, being square, hard, and fairly well timed. The swing is good, and the recovery well suited to eight-oar work. The men row with plenty of straight arm work, and they have good control of the slide. J. Fraser has retired from the boat, the vacant place being filled by J. Carleton. The men show very fair form, and are rather fast, although there are several faults of style. At present the crew is—F. Bellbridge, 11st., stroke; J. Collins, 12st. (7); C. M. Garrard, 12st. 7lb. (6); J. Carleton, 13st. (5); W. C. Macdonald, 12st., (4); W. Bellbridge, 12st. (3); F. Hooker, 12st. (2); C. Wilson, 10st. 9lb., bow. It will be seen that the men are all heavy weights, but it is believed that they will prove a powerful and a fast crew.

The following is the programme of the Balmain Sailing Club for the present season:—November 24, 14ft. dingies (wood or canvas), best-and-best; December 8, open boats 20ft. and upwards, best-and-best; January 12, 1889, half-deckers 20ft. and upwards, best-and-best, time allowance; February 9, 16ft. dingies; February 23, hurry-scurry race, boats 20ft. and upwards, limited crews (handicap); March 9, hurry-scurry race, boats under 20ft., limited crews (handicap); March 23, class of race not yet fixed; April 6, consolation race; April 20, closing day.

PIGEON-SHOOTING.

A series of matches and sweepstakes were shot off on Friday and Monday last, at Mr. A. Smidmore's grounds, Frankfort Park, Marrickville. A large number of shooters attended. The following are the results: Friday's shooting: No. 1 sweep, Messrs. Bayley and Boswell* divided, A gold bracelet, value £10 10s., was won by Boswell* for W. Morris. No. 2 sweep, Messrs. Bayley and Webster divided, No. 3 was won by Mr. Bayley, No. 4 by Mr. F. Smidmore, and No. 5 Messrs. F. Smidmore and G. Moore divided. Monday's shooting commenced with a first-class attendance of shooters and spectators. The first sweep was divided by Messrs. L. Gannon and Bayley, the second by Messrs. F. Smidmore and Boswell,* the third by Messrs. G. Moore and R. Benfield, and the fourth by Messrs. F. S. Hewitt, R. Benfield, and T. Clark. A private match of five birds each, at 28 yards' rise, one barrel, for £20, between Messrs. Bayley and *Boswell, was won by the former. The day's shooting concluded with a sweep, which was divided between Messrs. T. Clarke and F. Smidmore. It is the intention of the promoters of the Frankfort Park Shooting Ground to offer a prize of £100 to be shot for shortly, and the particulars will be duly advertised.

RIFLE-SHOOTING.

ALL SCHOOLS' MATCH WITH CARBINES.

The last match of the annual meeting of the New South Wales Rifle Association took place at the Paddington range on Thursday morning, at 9 o'clock. Major Strong was the officer in charge. The match was open to all cadets not exceeding 16 years of age from any school in the colony. The conditions were seven shots and two sighters at 200 and 300 yards. Sergeant Richardson, of the High School, obtained first prize and Captain Weigall's trophy, value £2, with a score of 61 out of a possible 70. Considering that the ranges have been changed this year from 100 and 200 yards to 200 and 300 yards, the shooting was very good. The Newington cadets figured conspicuously in the prize list, obtaining 11 out of 16 prizes, the Grammar School following with 3, and the High School with 2. The following is a list of the prize-takers:—

CASUALTIES.

Between 1 and 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon a small fire occurred at the auction rooms of Messrs Richardson and Wrench, at No. 98, Pitt-street, when several of the joists on the first floor were severely charred, but the flames were speedily extinguished by the employees with buckets of water. The fire originated through a defect in one of the chimney flues. The building, together with its contents, was insured in several offices.

At about half-past 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon a rather serious fire broke out in the dwelling house of Thomas King, in Mansfield-street, Balmain. The building, which contained six rooms, was constructed of weatherboards, and fell an easy prey to the flames. The whole structure was entirely demolished, and the contents were also completely destroyed. The Balmain Fire Company were quickly in attendance at the fire after the alarm had been given, but owing to the inflammable material of which the cottage was built the exertions they put forth had little effect, beyond keeping the flames from spreading to the adjacent houses. The property was owned by the occupant, and was insured in the Australian Mutual Fire Office for £200, as also were the contents for a similar amount. The origin of the fire is unknown. Shortly before 9 o'clock last night an alarm was given at the Metropolitan Fire Station, and on the brigade turning out with a steam engine it was discovered that the premises occupied by Messrs. Dorman and Co., leather and grindery merchants, of 101, Engine-street, Haymarket, were on fire. The flames, which had apparently originated among some boot uppers stored on the first floor, spread with great rapidity, and at one time the destruction of the entire warehouse seemed certain, but fortunately there was a strong pressure of water at hand, and the strenuous exertions made by the firemen proved effectual in checking the quickly-spreading flames. The amount of damage done could not be ascertained, but it is believed to be very considerable, as the entire stock, consisting of leather, grindery, &c., was severely damaged by fire and water. The sky lanterns on the roof and the ceilings were destroyed, together with a quantity of material that was packed under the roof. The contents were insured in the office of the Imperial Fire Company for £750, and for £500 in the New Zealand Fire Office. A portion of the ground floor of the building was leased to G. R. Neale, who carried on business as an auctioneer. His storeroom, which occupied a position abutting on the street, contained a quantity of provisions and a number of poultry, the former of which were slightly damaged by water. The flames were extinguished by the Metropolitan Fire Brigade, assisted by several volunteer fire companies, who lent valuable aid. The origin of the outbreak is at present unknown, but inquiries are being made in that direction. Mr. Dorman, who was the last to leave the premises at about 7 o'clock, stated that when he locked up there was no indication of fire, and everything appeared perfectly safe. The building was owned by Mr. G. Welsh, and was insured in the office of the Australian Mutual Fire Company for £1000.

A very serious accident happened yesterday to a boy named James Shannon, 10 years of age, residing with his uncle, Timothy Shannon, in Western-street, Balmain. It appears that the lad was proceeding homewards from Pyrmont, along the main road, and was riding or clinging on to the rear of a wood trolly, drawn by two horses, when by some means he fell to the ground and one of the wheels of the waggon passed over his head inflicting severe injury. He was at once picked up and taken to the Cottage Hospital at Balmain, and attended to by Dr. Carruthers. At a late hour last evening he was in a very precarious state, and his recovery was considered extremely doubtful.

On Monday evening last a man named W. Collins, residing at No. 188, Albion-street, Surry Hills, found a little boy wandering about in the vicinity of Albion-street. Upon interrogating the lad as to his identity and parentage, the boy was unable to give any satisfactory answer beyond stating that his name was James Pearce. Mr. Collins took the little stray to the Darlinghurst Police Station, where he has been taken charge of until sought for by some of his relatives. He is described as an intelligent looking boy, of about 4 or five years of age, with fair complexion and hair. He was dressed in a blue and white knickerbocker suit (sailor shape), blue coloured stocking, and white straw hat with black band around it.

A labourer named Sidney Lakin, aged 30, of No. 26, Hutchinson-street, Surry Hills, died at the Sydney Hospital yesterday morning from the effects of burns supposed to have been received through his clothes becoming ignited while he was extinguishing a fire in a chimney. He was admitted to the hospital by Dr. T. C. Fisher on the 15th ultimo, suffering from severe burns about the arms and chest. He remained there till his death. Deceased was a married man.

Our Melbourne correspondent telegraphs that the half-yearly meeting of the shareholders of the National Bank of Australasia was held at the bank this morning. A dividend of 12 per cent. and a bonus of 2½ per cent. were declared. The net result of the profit and loss account was £83,209, showing an increase of £15,000 over the preceding year.

As appears by advertisement a dividend at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum has been declared by the Queensland Brewery Company.

In the Import markets to-day business was on a moderate scale; with fairly good orders for the country. The usual fourth of the month bills have been fairly well met, except from the Newcastle district, where the strike has for the time crippled the resources of storekeepers. The general result indeed is better than had been anticipated, as the drought cannot but have had an unfavourable effect on trade balances. The flour market is firm at the following quotations:—Roller made, £11 10s. to £13; stone, £10 to £11 10s.; wheat, 4s. 10d. Business in tea is generally reported as quiet, the sales quoted being small. Some good trade parcels of Van Houten's cocoa placed at 3s. 6d. For dried fruits there was more inquiry. Currants, old fruit, sold at 4¾d. to 4¼d.; new fruit, 4¾d. to 5d., up to 5¼d. being paid for exceptional quality. Sultanas, new fruit, were sold at 5¾d. Elemes were done at 4¾d., and figs up to 7s. 6d. for full weights in small lots. At auction about 600 packages of sugar were cleared off at from £22 for yellows to £24 for medium whites; good whites sold privately at £24 10s. to £25. As mentioned yesterday in our telegraphic news, buyers were operating freely at Port Louis in Mauritius sugars for Australia. The Commercial Gazette shows that the total shipments to Australia had been 3477 tons against 2074 tons to the corresponding date of the previous year, and to New Zealand 1838 tons against 729 tons. The total exports from Mauritius from 1st August to 9th October were 15,693 tons against 14,246 tons in the preceding year. It appears that America is a buyer in the Mauritius market this year, 1802 tons having been shipped, none having been exported in the two previous years. A good parcel of Keen's spice was placed at 1s. 1d. The auction business in general groceries was of an unimportant character as an indication of market values. In brewers' goods the trade was quiet, buyers operating for trade requirements at 1s. 6d. for fairly good samples of Tasmanian and old English. Malt, 7s. to 7s. 6d., according to samples. In liquids, business reported in Martell's and Sazerac brandy at current rates. A moderate trade doing in whisky, sales of Usher's and Gaelic being mentioned at agents' prices. Pig stout noticed at 9s. 6d., the same price also being paid for Bulldog stout. A parcel of Smith Druce's old tom quitted. A good first of the month trade reported in Vd. clarets and Krug's champagne at late quotations. In the metal trade there was no new feature; the inquiry all round being extremely slack; the upward movement and high freights in England having so far not been fully responded to in this market. Some small transactions in woolpacks noticed at 1s. 11d. For cornsacks, 6s. 4½d., and bran bags 4s. 9d., are almost nominal quotations. Cement is very firm, 19s. 6d. having been paid for parcels to land.

Messrs. Fraser and Co. advertise for sale to-morrow (Wednesday), a catalogue of groceries.

According to the detailed returns of the mineral production of the United Kingdom, says the Economist, the total value at the mines of the mineral raised amounted to £55,326,000, as against £55,010,000 in 1886. The following are the most important figures:—

PURITY IS HEALTH.
CORBETT'S WORCESTERSHIRE SALT.
The well-known "Black Horse" brand, beautiful in colour, from the natural and pure brine springs of Stoke Prior, Worcestershire, as supplied to the Royal Families of England and Europe, should be exclusively used for all purposes where purity and health are of importance, for table purposes, in baking, dairy and provision curing, as physicians of eminence declare pure salt to be a vital constituent of the blood; hence the ancient proverb, "Ex sale salus"—from salt is health. Do not be misled by OUTLANDISH or SENTIMENTAL names for salt. You must not expect PURE water from an IMPURE fountain. Have confidence in an article that has stood the test of hundreds of years, and from one of the oldest firms in the trade.
John Corbett, M.P., Stoke Prior Salt Works, Worcestershire.
London Agents—Weston and Westall, 115, Lower Thames-street.
Colonial Agents—Henry Berry, Melbourne and Adelaide; Dalton Bros., Sydney; and may be obtained from the leading Storekeepers in all the colonies—only be satisfied you obtain "Corbett's Worcestershire Salt," "BLACK HORSE BRAND," as inferior Salt under other brands, more or less similar, and calculated to deceive, is sometimes offered.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1888.

Mr. Gladstone met with an enthusiastic reception at Birmingham on Monday. Speaking on the Irish question, he twitted the Chief Secretary for Ireland with absentee administration.

Speaking on foreign politics, Mr. Gladstone expressed the opinion that the future of the Great Powers is overcast by the Balkan difficulty. The Canadian and American fisheries agreement was an egregious failure, and the incident which brought about the removal of the British envoy from Washington was a serious slight to England. Egypt was England's greatest embarrassment.

Referring to domestic legislation, Mr. Gladstone, in his Birmingham speech, said the Local Government Act was practically a blank, on account of the omission of the licensing clauses. He advocated the principle of "one man, one vote" in Parliamentary elections, urged the necessity of land law reforms, asserted the right of the English and Scotch to raise the question of disestablishment, and predicted the downfall of the dissentient Liberals at the next general election.

Unless Major Walker can remain in charge of the Victorian Permanent Artillery for an additional three months, a fresh successor to him must be appointed, owing to the inability of the officer recently chosen to leave for Australia immediately.

Machinery and workmen for the Gawler Locomotive Works, in South Australia, have been despatched from England.

The Maori footballers have defeated the Stockton team by two goals to a try.

The Minister for Justice announced in the Assembly yesterday that he had ordered the release of the members of the Salvation Army imprisoned at Wollongong, upon being assured that the processions would cease until the validity of the bylaw had been tested.

Sir Henry Parkes has promised to inquire into the allegation that a nuisance is caused in the Centennial Park by offensive smells.

Saturday next is to be proclaimed a public holiday in the county of Cumberland.

Mr. Inglis stated in the Assembly yesterday that there had been three convictions at the Casino Police Court of persons neglecting to send their children to school. Six charges were withdrawn.

It is not the present intention of the Government to authorise a continuance of the survey of the Colo Valley railway to its convergence with the Great Western line.

The fire at Broken Hill destroyed a block of buildings 300 yards long and 80 yards in breadth, which included about 60 business places. A considerable amount of property was stolen on Monday night, and 60 special constables were sworn in to prevent theft. The amount of damage has not yet been ascertained, but the list published shows losses £21,900, and insurance £13,150.

Yesterday the City Water Supply and Sewerage Board determined to urge upon the Premier, the necessity of passing a bill during the present Parliamentary session, to deal with the drainage and sewerage of this city.

At yesterday's sitting of the Equity Court his Honor Mr. Justice Owen refused the application of the plaintiff in the action of Dibbs v. Dibbs, to amend his statement of claim.

On a warrant of the Victorian Admiralty Court the steamer Ranelagh was arrested at Brisbane yesterday. A writ had been issued for the recovery of £450 and costs in connection with the Ranelagh's recent collision with the schooner Spunkie. The amount claimed, with £200 costs, was paid pending the trial of the action, and the Ranelagh was then released.

A branch of the Sydney Protection Union was formed at Candelo yesterday. A strong committee was chosen, and it was decided to hold a public meeting in the near future to further the protectionist cause.

It is estimated that the recent bush fires in the Tambo district of Queensland destroyed between 200 and 300 miles of fencing.

The skeleton of a man, supposed to be that of a station hand named Stewart, who was lost in the bush four years ago, was found about five miles from Yantara yesterday.

The Parliamentary Session in Queensland has virtually closed, as the House will meet on Tuesday next to receive the reports of the Elections Tribunal on the recent petitions, after which Parliament will be prorogued.

Serious bush fires are raging on the Broula Range. A selector's residence was totally destroyed on Monday, and the fire extended to within 40 yards of the Broula Hotel before its course was checked.

Meetings of the masters' and miners' delegates were held at Newcastle yesterday, at which it was finally decided that a ballot shall be taken to-day on the agreement made at the recent conference.

Sir Arthur Palmer, as administrator of the Government of Queensland, has declined to assent to the Chinese Restriction Bill, which has been reserved for the signification of her Majesty's pleasure.

Several splendid seams of coal have been struck about 25 miles from Cooktown, and practical men from Newcastle are being engaged to work them.

Woolgrowers in the Gunnedah district are complaining of the system of weighing wool by the Department at the railway station.

A verdict of "accidental death" was returned at the inquest on the body of Wisby, who died from injuries received in the Fish River railway accident. The jury added a rider to the effect that the signals at Fish River cannot be safely worked by the guards of trains, and they could not see how the public safety can be secured unless a man is placed in charge of the same day and night.

A determined stand is being made against the Shearers' Union rules in the Carcoar district. Most of the stations are employing non-union men, and it is anticipated that there will be little difficulty in filling the boards.

Late on Monday night a goods train ran into a stationary engine on the line at Singleton. The driver and stoker of the train escaped unhurt, but both engines sustained considerable damage.

Dr. Arthur G. Henry has been elected resident medical officer of the Sydney Hospital yesterday in lieu of Dr. G. Hughes.

Another Clarence River sculler, named Brown, is coming to Sydney to undergo a thorough course of training. Authorities state that, with good schooling, he could defeat Beach, Kemp, or Hanlan.

The trial of Louisa Collins, for the alleged murder of her husband at Botany, was continued yesterday. The evidence was completed, and this morning the address for the defence will be commenced.

The Irish evicted tenants' fund subscribed in Queensland, amounted to £538. The final instalment of £138 was forwarded to Dublin yesterday.

Captain Sykes returned to Rockhampton yesterday after having made a thorough search for the wreck of the Eastminster. No further trace of the ill-fated vessel was found.

The debate last night upon the subject of the sale of Crown lands by auction ought to have been reserved until the financial statement is considered, or should have had a specific motion of censure for its foundation. One speaker said he felt that it was right to bring the matter forward, so that an expression of opinion might be obtained from the House upon it. That very remark was an illustration of the futility of the proceeding. How could an expression of opinion from the House upon this question, interesting and important as it undoubtedly is, be obtained by moving the adjournment of the House? The House is not committed by the wild talk of half-a-dozen members. The natural conclusion when such a subject is raised and discussed upon a motion for adjournment is that those who are parties to the transaction are anxious to avoid rather than procure an expression of opinion by the House, because they are sure that upon a division the House would pronounce against them.

One remarkable feature of the discussion last night was the frequent repetition of the assertion that the intention of the Land Act of 1884 was to limit the sale of Crown lands by auction so as to prevent the receipt by the Government in any one year of more than £200,000 as the proceeds. This assertion is so contrary to the facts of the case as almost to suggest a doubt of the sincerity of those who make it. The explanation may be that, as the Government could not be convicted of selling more than the prescribed area, the theory of a prescribed value is put forth as a foundation for censure. The intention of the Act is clearly expressed by the words of the Act:—"Crown lands not exceeding in the aggregate for the whole colony 200,000 acres in any one year may be sold by public auction . . . and the upset prices per acre shall not be lower than for town lands £8, suburban lands £2 10s., other lands £1 5s.; but such upset prices may be respectively fixed at any higher amounts, &c." It will be seen that not only has any provision of limitation as to the aggregate sum to be raised by auction sales during any one year been omitted, but also that any intention to make such a limitation is practically disavowed by the words of the statute. The words permit the sale of 200,000 acres, but by fixing the minimum upset prices at rates that would yield more than £200,000 for 200,000 acres without selling any town or suburban land, they show plainly that the aggregate sum to be raised in any one year was not taken into consideration.

One objection to the action of the Government was that if more than 200,000 acres were advertised for sale the Government would be pledged to sell the whole, if there were buyers ready to purchase. If the Government wished to sell up to the full limit, it would be necessary to make preparations for the offer of a larger aggregate area to the public. But everybody knows that there is no pledge in the advertisement. It is a well-established practice to advertise lands for sale and for various reasons to withdraw them before the day arrives. We do not say this in defence of the practice, the adoption of which in some cases may cause much inconvenience, although it may be fully justified by the circumstances in others; but in the face of this practice it is absurd to talk of the Government being pledged by its advertisements. The Government must be judged by what it sells, not by what it may propose at any time to offer for sale; and the conspicuous fact in the present case is that the Government has not sold, and does not apparently intend to sell, more than the area for selling which it has the full sanction of the law. Last year the area sold by auction was far within the limit. This year less than 54,000 acres were sold up to the end of September, so that to reach the limit more than 146,000 acres would have to be sold within the remaining three months. The sum realised up to September 30 was £106,000. The sum estimated for the rest of the year is £270,000. But, as the land to be brought into the market is to a large extent suburban or town land, and as some of the land lately sold has brought as much as £70, and in one case £200, per acre, it can be seen that the estimate of revenue may well be realised without selling an acre more than the law permits. For next year the estimate of receipts from auction sales is £200,000, which is equivalent to saying that it is not proposed to sell up to the prescribed limit. It would be impossible to sell so much without exceeding the TREASURER'S estimate.

National Library of Australia http://nla.gov.au/nla.news-page1388029

A great deal may be said about the policy of placing large areas of suburban land in the market. We have already remarked upon the impolicy of selling public lands which are about to be improved by the expenditure of public money so as to enable the purchasers to pocket the additional value to be afterwards given by the improvements. For instance, if the North Shore is to be some day connected with Sydney by a bridge, it would be folly for the Government to sell all its North Shore land at prices such as could be obtained whilst the project of constructing the bridge was only a matter of speculation. But this argument was pushed too far last night. If there are Crown lands through which a railway is being made and the works are approaching completion, it does not follow that the wisest course must always be to postpone the sale of those lands until the works are actually completed and the trains are running. It may be impossible to lay down a rule which would apply to all cases, because circumstances vary; but there was a great deal of truth in Mr. ABBOTT'S contention last night that land in the neighbourhood of a railway is likely to sell best if it is offered at auction shortly before the line is opened for traffic. It is then that the speculative spirit is rife, and men are most eager to purchase even at high prices, in confident expectation of a speedy increase of value. It sometimes happens after the opening of a line that expectations are disappointed, and a reaction follows.

It is not surprising that there should be a strong feeling against the acquisition by syndicates of large areas of land that will hereafter be of great value, and be in demand for residential purposes. The word syndicate has gained an unpleasant signification, and men's minds are filled, when they hear it, of forebodings as to the conversion of pleasant localities into aggregations of bricks and mortar, with little regard to the requirements of cultivated taste and less to those of sanitation. But it is possible to overdo hostility even to syndicates. As a rule they do not buy to hold for ever; they buy in order to sell again, and that at a profit. Their own interests would suffer from an attempt unduly to hold the land they purchased back from settlement. Of course the Government is responsible for arranging the details of sale in a judicious way, and providing opportunities for small as well as large buyers. So far as some of the lands proposed for sale in the neighbourhood of Sydney are concerned, there is not much room for surprise at their being placed on the market. It has long been known that the unemployed (to use a term which contradicts itself) have been employed in clearing Crown land, and making roads to or through it, with a special view to its sale at prices which would in some degree represent the value of the improvements. The prices already realised have vindicated that policy, and the Government will be justified in carrying it out within reasonable limits.

It was at one time a subject of complaint among the Romans people that although every citizen was expected to know the law, the laws themselves, which were required to be inscribed on tablets accessible to the public, were written in such small characters, and the tablets were fixed so high up, that the citizens had not the opportunity of acquainting themselves with their statutory obligations. The people of New South Wales are in more fortunate case. The statutes at large can be procured at a reasonable cost from the Government Printer, and if a person has command of sufficient capital to purchase them, he can begin practically to apply the proverb, "Every man his own lawyer." A perusal of the Constitution Act will enable him to see that he merely has to acquaint himself with such of the laws and statutes which were in force in England on the 25th July, 1828, as are applicable to this colony, and to master the Acts passed since that date by the Legislature of New South Wales, to ascertain what is his true position "in the eye of the law." It is true that this learning will not much avail him unless he pursues his studies in a judicial spirit—that is to say, interprets the statutes in the same sense as the Judges would do, or, should there unhappily be a difference on the Bench as to the meaning of any enactment, as the majority of the Judges would do. Having done this, he will obtain a clear idea of what his rights and duties really are.

Simple as all this may appear, if our student, before making himself familiar with the whole statute law, wishes to inquire what enactments have been made on any one subject, he will indeed find the inquiry not so readily answered. He will be referred to an excellent collection of our statutes edited by the Parliamentary Draftsman, commonly known as "Oliver's Statutes," but he will find that the latest statute contained therein is more than nine years old, and he will learn, to his infinite satisfaction, that during those nine years very many Acts have been passed making the most extensive alterations in the law. His proper sense of satisfaction at the activity of our Legislature in thus changing—and, it may be hoped, improving—our statute law ought not, perhaps, to be in any degree lessened by finding that during these nine years some 340 Acts of Parliament have been thus passed without any index of their contents having been published. It will probably occur to him that to run through these section by section, guided only as to the contents by the title of the Act and the side notes of the sections, is a labour of love. Lex non favet votis delicatorum, he will say to himself: The law does not favour the wishes of the over-fastidious. At the same time the sad truth must be admitted that the taste for reading through Acts of Parliament section by section is not given to all men; and, for the not inconsiderable number who wish merely to refer to them in order to ascertain the law on a given point, with as small an expenditure of time as possible—for these benighted persons a good index up to date is a godsend. To have such an index prepared and printed, and from time to time brought up to date and reprinted, would cost a trifling sum compared to the boon which it would confer. In England each year's volume of statutes contains a fairly complete index, besides tables showing the effect of the session's legislation. Besides this, every third year a most elaborate chronological table and index of the statutes from the year 1235 to the present time are published. To make a simpler work on something like the same plan for the Statutes of this colony from the year 1828—in other words, to publish Mr. OLIVER'S Index, brought up to the present time—would not be a Herculean task for the Government to undertake, and would do much to reduce the existing chaos to order.

Another matter of complaint to which frequent reference has been made in these columns concerns the form in which Parliamentary Bills are introduced, and sometimes passed. It is perhaps too much to expect that the legislators of a free country should be closely bound down by such restrictions as the laws of the English language and grammar impose upon ordinary mortals. Yet, if it be a sound maxim in interpreting statutes that the three points to be considered are the old law, the mischief, and the remedy, and that, so far as possible, every word is to receive full effect, it seems at least as binding on those who make as on those who interpret statutes. Unfortunately, such matters do not always receive due attention from a legislative reformer who introduces some pet amendment of his own without paying much regard to the existing law, or to the words which he employs. Last Wednesday a Bill of only two clauses was introduced into the House of Assembly by Mr. LEE and read a first time, having for its object the amendment of the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1883 in respect to prosecutions for perjury in certain cases, and the first clause of the bill purports to amend section 300 of that Act. That section is no doubt susceptible of amendment. It provides, among other things, that "where any oath has been taken before any District Commissioner for Insolvent Estates, or Justices or Justice, no prosecution in respect thereof shall be instituted without the leave of a Judge." Whether by a "Judge" is meant a Judge of the Supreme Court only, or whether the word here includes a Judge of the District Court is a moot point, which may some day give rise to costly litigation, and which might well be settled one way or the other in an amending Act. Whether an oath taken before a Local Land Board, the chairman of which is under the Lands Act of 1884, ex-officio a Justice of the Peace, is an oath taken before a "Justice" within the meaning of section 300, is another disputed point which might well be settled. Mr. LEE'S Bill does nothing to settle these points, but would, if passed, give rise to many fresh difficulties. The first clause is as follows: "Notwithstanding anything in the three hundredth section of the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1883, where any oath shall after the passing of this Act have been taken before any district registrar appointed or authorised under the Bankruptcy Act, 1887, or before any justices or justice of the peace, no prosecution in respect of such oath shall be instituted without the leave of such registrar, justices, or justice, as the case may be." What does this mean? The provisions of section 300 are in no way repealed. If an oath be taken before a justice of the peace, by that section no prosecution for perjury can be instituted without the leave of a Judge. If the present bill were to pass, the leave of the justice must be obtained as well. What is the object of this? What if the Judge and the justice disagreed, and one gave leave and the other refused it? Mr. LEE'S object in introducing his bill may be an admirable one, but if so it cannot be attained by a bill framed in this slipshod fashion.

We have had considerable correspondence regarding the new centre panel for the Cathedral reredos, which is being substituted, according to the understanding established at the Synod last year, for the original panel. The subject of the original is the Crucifixion, and to this a certain number of the clergy and laity of the Church of England in the diocese took exception. Legally, this panel might have been retained by the Chapter; but to bring the unpleasant and, it seemed to outside spectators, unprofitable, contention to an end, the arrangement which is now being consummated was made. The original panel is a work of art, distinctly so. To those who were not interested in the "idolatrous" side of the question it seemed both artistic and in harmony with the reredos as a whole. As a piece of beautiful sculpture it appealed to the eye. A deeper significance was, however, found in it. The crucified figure, it was feared by some, would lead to bending the knee in real worship to a graven image. It seemed, however, to be understood by those who experienced this fear, that a sculptured work representing the Transfiguration would not encourage such an attitude of body and mind. Therefore an order was given for a graven representation of this subject, and the work may now be seen at the Cathedral, though it is not yet erected. It is hard to understand the acute differences that this question of the reredos has raised. It seems scarcely possible, whatever the attitude of the body might be, that those who might say their prayers before the sculptured figure of the crucified Christ could be quite so benighted as to pray to it. The whole matter was not at the beginning worth quarrelling over; but when the trouble did occur and was liable to assume proportions which might involve the Church in a permanent division of parties, a compromise was the best way out of the difficulty. It was therefore settled that something should be substituted for the original panel which could not give religious offence to any, while it still might give artistic pleasure to all. To the representation of the Transfiguration it was supposed no one would object. Whatever there may be in the representation of the Crucifixion of a "Romish flavour," such an idea cannot be associated with the subject of the substituted panel. But then about the art? It must be apparent to all who view the two panels that the original is vastly superior as a work of art, and being so, it is not a matter for surprise if objections are heard against the erection of the new panel. It is faulty in form, indifferently conceived, and roughly executed. Regarding the artist, there seems to be some misapprehension, but it is said authoritatively that Mr. J. L. PEARSON, R.A., did not himself do the work, but was commissioned to get it done. Under any circumstance, however, the work should stand on its merits simply, and not upon the name of an artist.

Broken Hill has been visited by the disaster that comes to most mining towns some time in their existence. The fire-fiend has been at work in the principal street of the great silver-mining township of New South Wales, and has destroyed property, it is estimated, to the value of £70,000. The greater part of Broken Hill, and certainly the business portion of it, is one long street, composed chiefly of wood and corrugated iron. The inhabitants have lived in dread of a fire breaking out. Under all the circumstances, the present disaster may be considered a comparatively light one. The buildings were as dry as tinder, a strong breeze was blowing straight up the street, and even if there were plenty of willing workers, water could only be had in very limited quantities. It may be that no amount of water would have stayed the progress of this conflagration, still the present condition of the town as regards water is a menace to its safety. A few barrels of water sometimes would prevent a house from catching fire, but at Broken Hill how many houses could furnish the few barrels if required? There is no security against big conflagrations where wood is used principally in construction, and its use was inevitable at Broken Hill, but plenty of water might, under some circumstances, stay the progress of the flames. ELLIOTT'S Hotel, in this instance, might not have been burned if there had been water sufficient and fire-engines, for it was built of stone. Fortunately, no lives were lost, so far as is reported. It is also fortunate that the Post Office was not destroyed. The fire stopped at the corner opposite it, on the same side of the street. But the loss altogether is a serious one to Broken Hill. Trade has been somewhat depressed there of late, and this misfortune will only tend to heighten the commercial uncertainty which has affected the town since the big boom ceased. It is to be hoped that more substantial buildings will go up on the ashes of those that have been burned; and if such should be the case, every means should be taken to secure them against disaster. The most potent aids in this direction are well-drilled fire brigades, good fire-engines, and water wherewith to make them of any use. From where is the water to come? Will Stephens Creek give a permanent supply, or will it be necessary to go to the River Darling for it? In either case no further delay should take place in giving a satisfactory and permanent water supply to Broken Hill.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

OWING to an interruption in the telegraphic service which occurred late last night between here and Melbourne, we are able to publish only a portion of our report of the races at Melbourne yesterday. A full description of the Cup Day meeting and further particulars of the day's events will appear in a subsequent edition of this morning's Herald.

NOTICE was given in the Legislative Assembly yesterday that Mr. Sutherland will to-day move the adoption of the reports of the Parliamentary Standing Orders Committee with regard to the harbour improvements at Newcastle, the drainage works at North Shore, the drainage works at Manly, the erection of a new Central Police Court, the improvements at the Circular Quay, the construction of a storage reservoir at Pott's Hill, and the laying down of a second line of water-pipes between Potts Hill and the Crown-street reservoir.

THOSE who thought there would be no quorum in the Legislative Assembly yesterday, in consequence of the Melbourne Cup, made a decided miscalculation, for there were more than 40 members, or two quorums, in the House when the Speaker took the chair. Before the business could be entered upon, Mr. Melville arose and again brought forward the case of the imprisonment of the members of the Salvation Army at Wollongong. Mr. W. Clarke, however, informed the hon. member that he had that day ordered the release of the persons in question, on the assurance that they would abstain from breaches of the bylaw until the question of its validity has been decided by the Supreme Court. Mr. Melville also brought forward the case of a woman at Wallsend, who, he said, had been compelled to arise from her bed, and hold a candle while 18 policemen searched the house for an alleged participant in the recent riots. With regard to this matter, Sir Henry Parkes promised to make immediate inquiries. Mr. Speaker then announced that, as no objection had been taken to the names of the gentlemen he had nominated to the Elections and Qualifications Committee, the appointments now became permanent. He called upon those members of the committee present in the House to come forward and be sworn. This was done, but as Mr. Speaker went on calling the questions at the same time the noise made by the swearing-in prevented the answers from being heard with any distinctness in the gallery.

A GOOD number of papers, some of them voluminous, were laid on the table of the House by Ministers, and among them was a brief document, though one of a very satisfactory nature. Mr. Burns rose, and reminded the House that he had promised Mr. Garvan to give information respecting the revenue for the month of October. He produced the document, and proceeded to read some of the figures showing the increases that had taken place. These included under the head of Customs, over the revenue for the corresponding month of last year, £6,300. Stamp and succession duties showed an increase of £11,400; licenses, £540; railways, £41,800; land revenue, £10,300; postal services, £3900; telegraph services, £4800; pilotage, &c., £720; Public school fees, £560; fees of office, £730. The total increase for the month was £86,558.

A QUESTION of considerable interest to the general public arose out of the custom of ordering papers to be printed. Mr. Brunker laid on the table a large pile of manuscript, relating to the alleged illegal removal of timber from Crown lands, and, as usual, moved that the documents be printed. This motion has, by custom, become a matter of course, and is generally assented to without a word. But Mr. Wise, noticing the formidable bulk of these papers, ventured to point out the wasteful expenditure of public money so constantly going on in connection with the printing of useless documents, and hoped the Minister would not insist on the printing of the papers in question unless they were really of public importance. Mr. J. P. Abbott gave it as his opinion that there was more waste in connection with the printing of matters in their Votes and Proceedings than there was in regard to these papers. Sir Henry Parkes submitted that the printing of the Votes and Proceedings was necessary, inasmuch as these documents would in course of time become very valuable materials for history. So far the debate was perfectly relevant, but it appeared that Mr. Creer, a member of the Opposition, had moved for the papers, and some of the hon. gentlemen on the left hand of the Speaker accused Mr. Wise inferentially of objecting to the printing of the papers because the Opposition had asked for them. Mr. Wise, of course, denied having made any objection of the kind, and pointed out that he had simply asked for the assurance of the Minister that the papers were of public importance. After a little further discussion the motion for printing the papers was agreed to.

MR. NEILD called the attention of the Premier yesterday afternoon to a nuisance in the shape of offensive smells at the Centennial Park. Sir Henry Parkes said he would make inquiries into the matter; he intended to visit the Park himself as soon as he could spare the time. He deprecated the idea of any nuisance being caused by the Park, but at the same time he thought the people around might put up with a little temporary nuisance for the sake of the great work that was being carried out there.

HON. members of the Legislative Assembly sometimes complain of the little time allotted for the transaction of private members' business, yet it almost invariably happens on a private members' day that the greater part of the time is consumed in a discussion on the motion for the adjournment of the House. Directly the business paper had been "gone through," first "with a view to formal motions," and next to give hon. members an opportunity of "placing" their business, Mr. Garvan, being duly supported by five members, rose to move the adjournment of the House. His grievance was the sale of land by auction, and the immediately exciting cause was the recent publication of correspondence between Sir Henry Parkes and Mr. Charles Oliver. Mr. Garvan strongly condemned the selling of land to syndicates, and not for the settlement of people on the soil; and he accused the Treasurer of having pressed these sales of land, in order to show a balance in his accounts at the end of the year. He affirmed that if the directors of a public company had acted as the Government had, they would have been charged with fraud. The debate was continued at considerable length, without throwing much fresh light upon the question, until Mr. J. P. Abbott rose, and defended the action of the Government in selling land at Gordon, which realised £200 an acre. He considered it quite right that we should endeavour to wipe off our loans by means of land revenue.

SIR HENRY PARKES spoke to the full extent of the 20 minutes permitted on a motion for adjournment. He contravened assertions which had been made to the effect that his Government from 1878 to 1883 had originated the system of land auction sales. He showed, on the contrary, that that system had existed from the introduction of responsible government, and before. He quoted figures which showed that the proceeds of land auction sales during his administration from 1878 to 1883 were greatly below those of the previous years, although the population had largely increased. The last Government, of which Mr. Garvan was a member, had actually stated that in the then existing financial position of the country it was necessary to sell to the utmost acre allowed by law. The present Government, on the contrary, had sold little more than half the quantity they were allowed to sell. After some remarks from Messrs. Thompson and O'Mara, Mr. Bruuker addressed the House. He considered it the duty of the Government to make the most they could out of the public estate, so long as they encouraged settlement in so doing. The interests of the squatters and the selectors had been alone considered in the past, and the public had been left out in the cold. He denied that the Treasurer had been actuated by a desire to increase his balance through the sale of land; and he pointed out that, with regard to the sale of the suburban lands that had been referred to, instead of playing into the hands of syndicates, they had competed with syndicates, for they had given terms—one-fourth cash, and the remainder at one, two, and three years, at 5 per cent. interest. He had always opposed auction sales of land in the interior. With regard to the special areas he showed how he had increased the price, and secured a proper revenue from such of those lands as were sold. Mr. Garvan then replied, and at 10 minutes to 11 o'clock the motion for adjournment was put and negatived.

IT was very nearly 11 o'clock before the Legislative Assembly got to business last night. The Sydney Hydraulic Power Company's Bill, in charge of Mr. Garrard, was considered in committee of the whole. All the clauses were agreed to with a few slight amendments. It was stated that a somewhat similar bill, standing in the name of Mr. Garrett, would be withdrawn, as the two companies had amalgamated. The West Maitland Cattle Sale Yards Bill was read the second time, and taken through committee. Leave was given to bring in a bill to amend the Trade Marks Act, and the House adjourned at 29 minutes to 12 until the following afternoon.

THERE are three questions on the business paper of the Legislative Council for to-day, as well as two notices of motion, and one order of the day. The first notice of motion is by Dr. Creed, to restore to the paper his resolutions in reference to the hindrance of information sought by the select committee on the defences of the colony, on which he was counted out on October 24; the second is by Mr. Vickery, for leave to bring in the Trusts of Wesleyan Church Properties Bill. The order of the day is the third reading of the Church of England Property Bill.

MR. WALKER has given notice that he will move in the Legislative Assembly on Tuesday, December 11, "That, in the opinion of this House, his Honor Justice Windeyer should be asked to resign from the Bench, on the grounds that his notorious lack of humane feelings in the treatment and sentence of offenders brought before him for trial, and his want of sound judicial faculties, disqualify him for that exalted position."

THE Executive Council met yesterday afternoon—the Premier (Sir Henry Parkes) presiding, in the absence of the Governor, who is now on a visit to Melbourne. It was determined, at the request of the banking and mercantile institutions of the city, to proclaim Saturday next a public holiday in the county of Cumberland, and the proclamation was accordingly made in the Gazette issued yesterday.

A LABOR deputation from the residents of Redfern, introduced by Mr. Howe, M.L.A., waited on the Minister for Railways yesterday, at the Treasury, to bring under his notice the necessity for the erection of a goods siding at the south-east of the Eveleigh workshops. They represented that the siding would relieve the traffic at Darling Harbour, as well as prove of the greatest convenience to the inhabitants of Redfern, Botany, and surrounding districts. They estimated that at least 50,000 persons would be served by the siding, as there were a large number of manufacturers in the district, and an extensive coal and wood business was carried on in the locality. Mr. Burns, in reply, said he was glad to hear of the progress of the district, and thought that if the matter rested entirely with the Government, the siding would be constructed without delay; but under the Railway Act the determination of such matters devolved upon the Railway Commissioners, who would no doubt give due consideration to the request of the deputation. He would forward to the Commissioners the papers connected with the request, together with a minute from his colleague, the Minister for Works, in which that gentleman stated that Eveleigh was the centre of a large and important district, and that a siding at the place suggested would be most desirable.

A SERIES of documents in relation to certain remarks alleged to have been made in Parliament by Mr. Levien, in reference to Mr. District Court Judge Docker, was laid on the table of the Legislative Assembly yesterday. It appears that in July last Mr. Levien was reported in one of the newspapers as having stated in Parliament that Judge Docker had frequently made the most improper remarks on the Bench, especially in cases of indecent assault. Judge Docker, having seen the report, wrote to the Minister for Justice demanding an inquiry. Correspondence respecting this matter and other newspaper remarks seems to have gone on between the Judge and the Department of Justice at some length, and Mr. Levien was called upon by the department to substantiate his charges. It appears that in the beginning of October Mr. Levien promised to support in his place in Parliament the charges he had made against the Judge. His Honor demanded that if any tangible charges should be brought against him an inquiry should be held, either before a Parliamentary committee or any other tribunal the Minister might think fit.

A RETURN was laid upon the table of the Legislative Assembly yesterday, by Mr. Roberts, of all recommendations, minutes, tenders, and correspondence in connection with the lighting of the Parliamentary buildings with the electric light. There are no less than 111 different documents included in this return, dating from April 12, 1883, to September 14, 1888. On the last-mentioned date Mr. Roberts recommended that there be ordered from the makers, Messrs. Mathers and Platt, of Manchester, three dynamo machines, capable of running 220 Edison-Swan lamps each, together with the proper appurtenances. The estimated cost of each dynamo is £225.

AMONG the papers laid on the table of the Legislative Assembly yesterday was a return of the area of land sold from 1884 to the end of September last, together with the amount received for the same. It appears that the total area sold in 1884 was 1,748,116 acres, for which £763,431 18s. 5d. was received; in 1885 the area was 1,409,888 acres, which brought £563,440 7s. 6d.; in 1886 the figures were 1,242,598 acres, for £515,283 14s. 7d.; in 1887 they were 1,025,991 acres, for £403,934 14s. 9d.; for the first nine months of the present year the area was 859,932 acres, for £345,948 9s. 8d. The auction sales for the period named, with the cash results, were:—1884, area 41,546 acres, £74,442 12s. 3d.; 1885, area 2648 acres, £70,859; 1886, area 60,353 acres, £103,704 18s. 5d.; 1887, area 107,374 acres, £139,602 12s. 11d.; first nine months of 1888, 55,517 acres, £107,118 9s. 9d.

YESTERDAY evening Sir William Fox, a former Premier of New Zealand, visited the Legislative Assembly, and was introduced to the members of the Ministry, and most of the members of the House who happened to be present. Sir William Fox has arrived here, accompanied by Mr. F. G. Ewington and Mr. W. Loch, the former of Auckland, and the latter of Nelson, New Zealand, en route for Melbourne, where the party will, as delegates, attend the International Temperance Congress which opens in the Victorian capital on the 19th instant.

WE have been shown the certificate won by the Cleveland-street Public school for the march past at the recent meeting of the Teachers' Amateur Athletic Club. The certificate, which is designed and executed in water-colours by Mr. W. T. Anderson, of the Sydney High School, has the lettering, giving the name of the club, &c., in the centre, surrounded by a border of wild flowers and native birds and insects. At the foot is a small picture of Sydney harbour. The whole is artistically carried out, the flowers especially being well painted.

MR. RICHARD NICHOLAS JOHNSON, who has been in the service of the Government for many years past in the Stamps Department, and who has been in charge of that Department since the decease of Mr. William Hemming some six months ago, was, at a meeting of the Executive Council yesterday, appointed Commissioner of Stamps. We are informed that Mr. Johnson performed his duties while in temporary charge of the Department with entire satisfaction to the Treasurer, upon whose recommendation he was appointed.

THE general orders for the military manœuvres to be held on the 9th instant were issued yesterday as follows:—Column for attack under Colonel Goodlet: 2nd Regiment, half field battery V.A., with horses, 1st and 2nd Regiments infantry. Defending force, under Lieutenant Colonel Holborrow: 3rd Regiment infantry; half field battery, V.A., with horses, engineers, 3rd Regiment infantry, Scottish rifles. Each gun will be provided with 30 rounds of ammunition, and each rifle with 40 rounds. The officers commanding regiments will arrange for transit by rail for such of their corps as are coming in from the country, both to and from Sydney, with the exception of the return of the Parramatta, Windsor, Richmond, and Penrith corps, for which arrangements have already been made with the Railway Department for their return by special train, leaving at 8 p.m. on the 9th instant. The attacking forces will be supplied with puggarees of a red Turkish colour, to be worn on the helmet during the operations. The engineers will be charged with entrenching tools for 200 men, and the usual implements for the constructing of hasty entrenchments, &c.

THE business before the Full Court yesterday was confined to the resumption of the arguments in the Equity appeal, Blunt v. Terry. The addresses of counsel concluded at 4 o'clock, and judgment was reserved. In the Jury Court, the action Tasmanian S. N. Company v. Brown and others, was continued, and will probably be finished to-day.

IN the Equity Court yesterday, Mr. Justice Owen gave judgment in Dibbs v. Dibbs, on an application by the plaintiff to amend his statement of claim. Parties, he said, might, according to the rules, make all amendments that might be necessary, but not so as to make a new case, or set up a different issue to the one raised in the original pleadings. He had to determine whether the proposed amendments made clear the issue raised between the parties, or whether they make a new case and raised a new issue. The case proposed to be made by the amendments was wholly different, and raised a different issue. It did not rest on the written agreement as it stood, but on a modified agreement moulded so as to express the real intentions of the parties. The transaction referred to in clause one of the agreement as a "purchase" was to be read as a "mortgage," and the offer to purchase at a fixed price was to be read as a right to redeem. The issue, therefore, under the amended statement of claim would not be whether such a promise was made, but whether the written agreement expressed the real meaning of the parties. If such an amendment were allowed not only would plaintiff make out a new case, but the defendant would have to set up a new defence, and the evidence at the hearing would be of an entirely different character. He therefore refused the application for leave to amend.

SOME new regulations were passed by the Executive Council yesterday with respect to first offenders between the ages of 16 and 25 years, who have been created a seventh class of prisoners for special treatment under the reformatory system at the Darlinghurst gaol. With a view of suppressing larrikinism, first offenders will be punished more severely than usual on and after 1st January next. They will be confined in separate cells, and will not be allowed, even when taking exercise, to associate with confirmed criminals commonly described as "gaol birds." Provision is now being made at Darlinghurst for the carrying out of the new system, and it is partly on this account, and partly to prevent overcrowding, that the number of ordinary prisoners has been reduced from seven to five hundred.

THE trial of Louisa Collins for the alleged murder of her husband, Michael Peter Collins, at Botany, was continued at the Darlinghurst Courthouse yesterday, before his Honor Mr. Justice Windeyer. Mr. Cohen and Mr. Coffey appeared for the Crown, and Mr. Lusk appeared for the defence. The whole of the evidence in the case was completed. Mr. Lusk will commence his address to the jury this morning. The jurors summoned to attend the Court to-day will not be required until to-morrow morning.

THE monthly meeting of the Royal Society of New South Wales will take place this evening at the society's house, Elizabeth-street.

A HORTICULTURAL and Wild Flower Show will be held at the Moorefield Racecourse, Kogarah, on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday next. The object of the show is to get rid of the debt upon the Roman Catholic Church at Kogarah. The original cost of the church was £2600, and there still remains £1250 to be paid. The promoters expect to have a fine display of flowers.

THE Permanent Artillery Band, under the direction of Bandmaster M. Devery, will perform the following programme of music in the Botanic Gardens this afternoon (weather permitting), commencing at 3.30 o'clock:—March, "Merry Monarch," Scholes; overture, "Precious," Weber; mazurka, "Arm-in-arm," Strauss; selection, "La Dame Blanche," Boieldieu; gavotte, "Jubilee," Kottaun; valse, "Atmospheric," Gungl; "God save the Queen."

THE CONSTITUTION BILL of WESTERN AUSTRALIA.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]
(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

PERTH, TUESDAY.

In the Legislative Council last night, the motion for the second reading of the Constitution Bill was agreed to, the debate lasting two sittings. Two amendments were proposed, one declining to agree to the bill unless provision was made for an elective Upper House, and the other agreeing to a nominated Upper House for a period of six years. The Council, however, carried the original motion by a majority of 13 to nine. The general feeling of the majority is averse to the delay which would ensue if an elective Upper House were insisted on.

MR. GLADSTONE AT BIRMINGHAM.

AN ENTHUSIASTIC RECEPTION.

[BY CABLE.]
(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

LONDON, Nov. 5.

Mr. Gladstone has addressed a vast audience in the Birmingham Town Hall. He was received with enthusiasm.

In the course of his speech Mr. Gladstone referred to the Irish question, and twitted the Right Hon. A. J. Balfour, the Chief Secretary for Ireland, with absentee administration. Referring to the situation in Europe, he said that the future of the Great Powers was overcast, owing to the Balkan difficulty. The recent parleyings in relation to the Canadian and American fisheries dispute he considered an egregious failure. The incident in which Sir L. Sackville-West, the British Envoy at Washington, was involved, had, in his opinion, resulted in a serious slight to England. Egypt he regarded as England's greatest embarrassment. He ridiculed the legislative triumphs of the Unionists. Speaking on home affairs, he said that the omission of the licensing clauses rendered the Local Government Act practically a blank. In Parliamentary representation he advocated the principle of one man, one vote. He urged the necessity for a reform in the land laws, and asserted the right of the Scotch and English people to raise the question of disestablishment. He predicted the downfall of the dissident liberals at the next election.

QUEENSLAND.

BRISBANE, TUESDAY.

In the Legislative Assembly to-day a message was received from the Administrator of the Government notifying that a number of bills had received the Royal assent, but the Chinese Restriction Bill had been reserved for the signification of her Majesty's pleasure. This matter was referred to in a subsequent discussion. Sir Samuel Griffith said there was no more reason to reserve that bill than the previous Chinese Bills. He was surprised that, after the controversy between the Government and the Colonial Office in 1876 and 1877, when the latter gave way on Parliament passing the Act a second time, such a retrograde movement should have been made. Sir Thomas M'Ilwraith said the Administrator had declined to give his assent to the bill, and the Administrator would not care more for the opinion of the hon. member than for that of the Premier. The present law imposing a poll tax would continue in force till the new bill became law. The Appropriation Bill and Treasury Bill for £892,000 were passed through all their stages. The latter is to cover the loan votes recently passed, but the Premier intimated that he had no intention of issuing bills. All the remaining items of Government business were discharged from the paper. Several motions by private members were disposed of after some hours' discussion, and the business of the session virtually ended. The House adjourned till next Tuesday, in order that the report of the judge on the elections petitions recently heard may be received.

The Legislative Council passed the Appropriation Bill and Treasury bills through all their stages, and adjourned till Tuesday.

ADELAIDE, TUESDAY.

The Council to-day had but a short sitting, merely touching the Chinese Immigration Bill, especially the clause concerning uniform legislation by the other colonies before operating here. The decision was postponed till to-morrow.

In the Assembly the Government promised to arrange a Parliamentary trip to the Renmark Mildura irrigation colonies if it was the general wish of the members, which appeared to be the case. The chief business was the continued progress of the Lands Bill in Committee, which was well advanced.

THE WRECK OF THE EASTMINSTER.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

ROCKHAMPTON, TUESDAY.

Captain Sykes returned to-day from the search for the wreck of the Eastminster. He visited the islands and sandbanks of the Capricorn group, and found indications of wreckage on the island, where French Peter said he waited for two or three days after eating poisoned fish, and which is 5ft. above high-water level. There was an empty case, which was evidently a repack, and had apparently been recently opened. There was also a 50lb. bag of flour branded Adelaide Steam Milling Company, which was spoilt by sea water, and was evidently from the schooner Louisa Lamont. There was not a particle of drift timber or indication of the wreck of a small vessel, or of anyone having camped there. A detached reef was next visited, where portions of the topmast of a small schooner were found. Heron Island, Masthead Island, and other places were thoroughly searched, but nothing new was found.

BRISBANE, TUESDAY.

The steamer Ranelagh was arrested yesterday under a warrant from the Victoria Admiralty Court. The affair arose out of the recent collision between the Ranelagh and the schooner Spunkie, by which the latter was sunk. The owner of a portion of the Spunkie's cargo commenced proceedings for the recovery of £450 and costs. A writ was accordingly issued, and the vessel was arrested, but was released on the amount claimed, and £200 to cover costs, being paid into court, pending the trial of the action.

ADELAIDE, TUESDAY.

The suggestion made by the Hospital Board in a deputation to the Treasurer on October 24, that Dr. Whittell be appointed Medical Superintendent of the Adelaide Hospital, with the view of remedying the present unsatisfactory working of the institution, is not likely to be adopted. Mr. Playford promised the deputation that he would consult the Colonial Surgeon. The result has been that Dr. Patterson reported unfavourably on the proposal. He does not consider it necessary that a medical superintendent should be appointed. The hospital is comparatively small and not likely to increase. As previously arranged, Dr. Whittell will now be requested to discharge the duties of coroner.

The Railway Commissioners propose shortly to visit Port Pirie with the view of making arrangements for the increased traffic with the Barrier that is likely to arise through the action of the Broken Hill proprietary directors in erecting desilvering works there. The Railway Commissioners are desirous of laying their proposal for a north-western railway station before Parliament this session.

THE SOUTH AUSTRALIAN RAILWAYS

[BY TELEGRAPH.]
(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

ADELAIDE, TUESDAY.

The annual report of the public works of the colony has been laid before Parliament. The documents showed that the net earnings of the railway at the end of the financial year was 4·60, the traffic on the Silverton line showing even a greater increase than was expected by the Commissioner of Public Works. Relative to the new Railway Commissioner, the report mentions that the financial control of the board will have to be better defined. A whole year has passed without a serious accident. Special efforts have been made in the direction of water conservation, and for proceeding with the transcontinental railway in the Northern Territory. A statement is appended, showing that our railways are constructed and maintained at a much less cost than those of New South Wales or Victoria. A permanent survey of the transcontinental railway has been made 700 miles from Adelaide. The traffic during the year has shown a general increase. Careful calculations show that the line to Melbourne is being worked at a loss, although the cost of the working of the locomotive department is continually decreasing. The total expenditure on water works amounted to nearly a million and a-half. The total revenue for the year being a trifle over 3 per cent. on the capital cost, the Sewers Department giving interest at 4·10 per cent. The Sewage Farm shows a slight profit. The total expenditure on public works during the year was one million and a-third. 1500 miles of railways are opened, and 324 in progress. The Railway Commissioners supplemented the statement with their first annual report, and suggested that if Parliament allocated one-half of the estimated receipts to meet the working expenses, it would be a most convenient arrangement. They reported the result of their inspection of the railways throughout the colony, and spoke favourably of the methods of discipline previously adopted. They strongly recommended the removal of the locomotive workshop from the city and the improvement of the Adelaide station. They strongly emphasised the necessity of making a uniform railway gauge, and suggested a conference with the other colonies to discuss the question practically and financially. The Barrier trade is shown to have contributed £120,000 towards the gross revenue since the opening of the line to Broken Hill in January last. There is expected to be a large increase in that traffic on account of the reduced rates for the carriage of low grade ores.

MR. TONKIN, M.L.A., ON FREE TRADE.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]
(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

BATHURST, TUESDAY.

Last night Mr. Tonkin, M.L.A., addressed a meeting at the School of Arts hall on the subject of free trade. There was a large attendance, the Hon. W. H. Suttor being in the chair. The meeting was somewhat disorderly, a small body of protectionists causing disturbance during the lecture. Mr. Tonkin spoke for upwards of two hours. He said the manufactories of New South Wales were greater than those of Victoria, the wages paid were higher, and the wealth per head of this colony greater; he contended that free trade was the greatest benefit to farmers and miners; he discussed the financial prosperity of Victoria and New South Wales under their fiscal policies of protection and free trade, and argued that the prosperity of this colony was far in advance of Victoria. He stated they should consider the question on its broad basis and not be led away by side issues. A vote of thanks was accorded Mr. Tonkin at conclusion of the proceedings, which did not terminate till after 11 o'clock.

Coman, J.P., was unanimous in asserting that a change of the fiscal policy was necessary for the well-being of the country. A resolution that it was desirable to form a branch of the Protection Union was carried unanimously, after which members were enrolled. A strong committee was formed, consisting of Messrs. W. P. Coman, Walter Woodd, J.P., John Fanaher, J. W. Sharpe, James Cochrane, J.P., W. Sharpe, W. J. Collins, W. H. Scanes, Patrick Heffernan, Thomas Heffernan, James M'Naught, with Mr. Duncan M'Naught as hon. secretary, and Mr. W. J. Coman, J.P., as chairman. No rain has fallen yet. Water is 3s. per cask at Mount M'Donald, and one crushing-machine has had to stop work for want of water. Bush fires are raging on Broula Range on the Western Falls. A selector's place was burned down yesterday. At 9 o'clock last night the fire had burnt to within 40 yards of Ingrey's Broula Hotel, and numbers of men were assisting to put it out. A high wind was blowing, and the fire at that point was checked by chopping down fencing and clearing away burned trees. Ingrey's sheep were removed to a place of safety at Warrengong, a station at the southern extremity of Broula range. Great destruction of grass has taken place, and the fires are raging easterly towards the river. Last week several miles along the railway line at Myala were burnt, but no railway fencing or other Government property was damaged, owing to the exertions of the officials and other people in that locality. The origin of the fire is not known.

There are numerous complaints from woolgrowers respecting the system of weighing wool at the railway. The department refuse to disclose their weights to consignors without payment, and they are frequently considerably over growers' and wool warehousemen's weights.

INVERELL, TUESDAY.

Successful meetings have been held during the last month throughout the district, for the purpose of forming a Farmers' Association, the initiation of which was undertaken by Mr. T. R. M'Lean. A final meeting was convened for Inverell, which took place on Saturday afternoon last, when Mr. W. Gilhome occupied the chair. No satisfactory arrangement, however, was arrived at, and the idea has been abandoned for the present.

The thermometer was 93° in the shade to-day.

KIAMA, TUESDAY.

Last evening there was a large assemblage in the Anglican schoolroom, Kiama, to listen to addresses in connection with the Orange commemoration. Most of the Protestant clergymen of the district were in attendance, and the addresses were suited to the occasion.

Rain is still very much needed in this district. Some of the natural sources of water supply are being exhausted to an extent unknown for a quarter of a century.

SILVERTON, TUESDAY.

The Silverton Cricket Club is at present holding the premier position in the Barrier Ranges. The Cricketing Association intend holding a grand holiday carnival on Friday, the 9th instant. Three contests will take place on the recreation reserve, the principal being Silverton v. Zingari. The day will be wound up by a concert and dramatic performance in the Hamlyn Hall in the evening.

The weather has been exceedingly changeable during the last few days, heavy gales and duststorms alternating, with intense heat. A slight thunderstorm worked up yesterday, and a few light showers fell, but not enough to be of any service.

The smoke of the fire at Broken Hill was distinctly visible here last evening.

The town is very quiet, and business is duller than has been known for a long time past, owing to the depressed condition of mining matters generally. The total revenue received by Mr. R. Mooney, collector of Customs at Silverton, for the month of October, was £1148 7s. 3d. The amount received through Mr. Williams, warden's clerk, was £122; through Mr. J. Saunders, clerk of petty sessions, £59 0s 7d.

WELLINGTON, TUESDAY.

An Orange commemoration came off last evening at the Protestant Hall, and was largely attended. An address was delivered by Mr. Stephen, M.L.A. for Redfern, who, with Mr. A. J. S. Gilchrist, of Sydney, had been previously entertained at a picnic at the Caves, and afterwards at a banquet at which about 60 sat down.

The continued hot and dry weather has dispelled every hope of a harvest.

WILCANNIA, TUESDAY.

All signs of rain have passed off, and there is nothing to vary the hot days, which are becoming monotonous. All business is at a standstill.

WINDSOR, TUESDAY.

A slaughterhouse, the property of Mr. Thomas Primrose, in the occupation of Mr. Sinfield, butcher, was burned down, together with its contents, consisting of tallow, &c., on Monday night. The fire is supposed to have been the work of an incendiary.

Rain is threatening. The rainfall this year is 14in. below the average.

THE FISH RIVER RAILWAY ACCIDENT.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]
(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

GOULBURN, TUESDAY.

The taking of evidence in the inquest on Wisby, the victim of the Fish River railway accident, was concluded at 5 o'clock this afternoon. James Lemon, a passenger by the first division, deposed that he heard the guard call out to the driver and fireman five or six times, "Go along, Bob, she will be coming into us soon," or something to that effect; about a minute elapsed from the time he first heard the guard sing out till the crash came. George Brown, another passenger, deposed that he heard the guard call out to the passengers; he did not hear him sing out to the driver. John Tudor, a passenger, deposed that he heard the guard call out to the driver. Of the three preceding witnesses, the first said that he believed the train stopped at Fish River between five and ten minutes, the second that he thought the train was there three and a-half or four minutes, and the third said that the train was there about five minutes. Norman Knudson, a passenger in the second division, deposed that just before the collision he heard two whistles from the driver of the second division, and after that a long whistle by the same engine, and just before the collision two other sharp whistles. Alexander Crawford, traffic inspector, deposed that there was no special danger at the Fish River bridge; after the accident he examined both Evans's and Davis's watches; Evans's was four minutes slow and Davis's two minutes fast; witness gave Evans and Hill good characters for steadiness. The jury returned a verdict "That the man Wisby met his death accidentally in the railway collision at Fish River on the 27th October; but owing to the conflicting state of the evidence, we find that we cannot attach blame to anyone." The following rider was added—"In the opinion of this jury the signals at Fish River cannot be safely worked by the guards of trains, and we wish it to be conveyed to the Railway Commissioners that we do not see how public safety can be secured unless a man is placed in charge of the same both by day and night."

THE FIRE AT BROKEN HILL.

SIXTY BUSINESS PLACES DESTROYED.

SOME OF THE LOSSES AND INSURANCES.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]
(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

BROKEN HILL, TUESDAY.

The town presents a most forlorn appearance to-day. The fire is out, with the exception of a few smouldering sticks here and there. The buildings from the Post-office northwards to the corner opposite the Broken Hill Hotel have been clean swept by the fire, and nothing is to be seen but a few chimneys, heaps of twisted and scorched galvanised iron. The block destroyed measures about 300 yards in length by 80 yards in breadth. Of Elliott's Hotel nothing is left but the walls, and they are in bad condition. About 60 business places fronting the main street have been destroyed. The following are a few of the losses sustained, and the insurances effected:—Laybourne Smith, chemist, £1500, insured for £500; Ford and Callaghan, £8000, insured for £3000; Lorrain and Frodd, loss £150; Knight, tailor, £150. He was insured for a similar sum, but allowed the policy to lapse four days ago. Kuntz, tobacconist, £1000, insured for £500; Trelloar and Co., drapers, insurance £6500; Wight and Co., news agent, £800, insurance £300; Way Lee, £800, insurance £200; Elliott's Hotel, insured in the Imperial for £1500 and in the Phoenix for £300; Sanders, draper, insured for £850. The value of the stock destroyed was £1250. One week ago he tried to effect a further insurance of £500, but the company declined to take any more risks in that block. W. G. Pearce, butcher, has lost about £250, and is not insured. W. O'Connor, auctioneer, was burned out, and is not insured. Barnet and Harris lost £800 of property, and is not insured. J. Stewart, fancy goods, stock worth £700, not insured. The salvage in any case is not great. It is now being removed from the street. A good deal of theft was practised last night, and though the police did all they could, their force was so small in comparison with that of the thieves that they were not able to exert much control. Sixty special constables were sworn in, and did good service. A great number of cases of pocket-picking occurred during the excitement. Long before the fire reached some shops the crowd amused themselves with breaking the windows and doing other useless and destructive work. The dress of one woman at Elliott's Hotel, who was escaping from the flames, caught fire, and she fainted, but she was seen by the firemen, and was ultimately rescued without serious injury.

Much mental depression is caused by the loss of property, but in some instances energetic landholders are already erecting temporary structures to carry on business. The Union Bank books and money were carefully locked in the safe, but the lock was injured, and the keys were consequently useless. It was found necessary to send to Adelaide for an expert to come and open it before any business can be done. Portions of house furniture and goods of all kinds are scattered about, the whole presenting a scene of the wildest confusion.

FREE TRADE MEETING AT KIAMA.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]
(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

KIAMA, TUESDAY.

Mr. Alfred Miller, agent and lecturer for the Free Trade Association of New South Wales, arrived here yesterday, and addressed a meeting of residents in the Temperance Hall last night, the Mayor of Kiama (Mr. H. T. Noble) presiding. Mr. Miller delivered a telling address, many portions of which were warmly applauded. Mr. Richardson, protectionist, was present, and objected to some of the lecturer's statements, but Mr. Miller met the objections in a way that satisfied the meeting. On the motion of Mr. D. Finlayson, seconded by Mr. Jas. Somerville, a hearty and unanimous vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. Miller. He addresses a Jamberoo audience to-night.

RAILWAY COLLISION AT SINGLETON.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]
(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

SINGLETON, TUESDAY.

At 11 o'clock last night a goods train ran into a stationary engine that was on the line at the station. The driver and stoker both jumped off the goods train and escaped without injury. Considerable damage was done to both engines.

THE SHEARING DIFFICULTY.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]
(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

CARCOAR, TUESDAY.

Most stations in the district are making a determined stand against the Shearers' Union. Coombing, Nunelam, Parks, and Sunnyridge started this week with non-union shearers. It is anticipated that they will fill the boards in a few days in spite of the union. A large number of union men are still camped in the neighbourhood, hoping that the stations may yet be compelled to call in their services, but this seems unlikely, as the non-union men are already at work. Good shearers are determined to assist the run holders in the stand taken against the union. Several other stations are about to start in the same district, and seem determined not to accept the union rules. At Sunnyridge the men are working under a verbal agreement. The owner reports that his shearers are earning from 15s. to 28s. per day, according to the work done. The police, fearing a disturbance on Sunday night last, instructed the guard of the mail train to alight a number of non-union shearers about a mile from the platform, owing to the large number of union men awaiting their arrival. The police magistrate, accompanied by the police, visited the union men's camp to-day for the purpose of holding an interview with them.

COWRA, TUESDAY.

Shearing is now almost completed, no inconvenience having been experienced from the interference of Union shearers, probably because these did not arrive here in time in appreciable numbers, and the few who did so while shearing was on appear to have sunk their identity. They are however, endeavouring to upset the existing arrangements, and are causing annoyance at the sheds between here and Carcoar.

INVERELL, TUESDAY.

The shearing difficulty seems to be subsiding in this district, most of the sheds being worked under the owners' rules, which have been agreed to by many union men.

WATER SUPPLY FOR BROKEN HILL.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]
(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

ADELAIDE, TUESDAY.

The Railway Commissioners have had under consideration a telegram received by the Commissioner of Works from Broken Hill, asking if it were possible for the South Australian Government to have water conveyed to Broken Hill from Beetaloo or some other available source of water supply. The commissioners have agreed to convey water from Point Pirie, which is the nearest available source of supply, to Cockburn, at the rate of 1d. per gallon, conditionally upon tanks being provided and connected together and furnished with large pipes. This decision was telegraphed to the authorities at Broken Hill.

THE SALVATION ARMY AT WOLLONGONG

[BY TELEGRAPH.]
(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

WOLLONGONG, TUESDAY.

Mr. William Richardson, who has made himself very prominent here of late, addressed a large crowd of people yesterday near the wharf, and spoke in the most abusive terms regarding all constituted authorities, including the Ministry and the Judges of the Supreme Court. He stated that he knew for a fact that some of these men had broken the law both of God and man. On this account members of the Salvation Army could not expect justice from the authorities. Mr. Richardson will have to appear before the Bench on Thursday, charged with using abusive and insulting language towards the Mayor.

DISCOVERY OF A SKELETON NEAR YANTARA.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]
(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

WILCANNIA, TUESDAY.

The skeleton of a man has been found five miles from Yantara. It appears to have been there a long time, and is supposed to be that of a man named Stewart, who was travelling on the road about four years ago and got lost. His swag was found at the time, but the police, after much search, could not discover his body. He had a pair of blue trousers when he left the station, and a shred of blue cloth has been found near the skeleton, which favours the supposition that the skeleton is that of Stewart.

MUNICIPAL COUNCILS.

DARLINGTON.

The monthly meeting of the municipal council of Darlington was held at the council chambers, Darlington, on November 1. There were present—The Mayor (Alderman Elvy), with Aldermen Pepper, Spring, Crispin, Hawken, M.L.A., Johnson, Graham, and Beale. Inward correspondence was received and dealt with as follows:—From the secretary Department of Works, upon the subject of asphalting the footpath on the north-west side of the Darlington-road, and stating that the Department do not interfere with the footways, only the traffic portion of the road being in their charge. Alderman Beale said that he would table a resolution in reference to this matter for the next meeting. From the Board of Water and Sewerage, stating that during the recent rains a large quantity of road metal, &c., was swept into the Prince Alfred Hospital sewer by the Black Wattle extension sewer, and requesting that all the gully-shafts connecting with the sewer be at once protected with suitable gratings, and that the same be not left open in the wet weather. From the secretary of the Deaf and Dumb and Blind Institution, asking that some arrangement may be made with his board to water the Newtown-road opposite the institution. On the motion of Alderman Spring it was resolved that the road should be watered at a cost of 12s. per week. Finance: The chairman of finance submitted his report, recommending payment of accounts amounting to £169 10s. Alderman Hawken asked a question as to the obtaining of blue metal. The Mayor explained that the council were receiving their blue metal from Bowral. The Mayor submitted a report from the inspector, recommending that a fresh site be obtained for the disposal of refuse, the present one being now filled up. The report was received and adopted. Tender: For dikes, Messrs. Mater and Pope, at 4s. 3d. each, was accepted. Motions: By Alderman Beale—"That the name of Calder-road be altered to Calder-street."—Carried. By Alderman Crispin—"That water connections be placed to the water mains at the corner of Golden Grove-street and Cleveland and Darlington streets, at a probable cost of £14; also that a hydrant be purchased at a cost of £5 5s." The meeting then terminated.

PROSPECT AND SHERWOOD.

The fortnightly meeting of the above council was held on Thursday evening. Present: The Mayor (Alderman Jones), and Aldermen Hollier, Elliott, Muston, Paton, Kenyon, Airey, and Anstiss. The Mayor announced that he had suspended Mr. M'Manis, the council clerk, for neglect of duty, and stated that he wished the matter to be dealt with in committee of the whole at the next ordinary meeting. A scene here occurred, and Aldermen Hollier and Muston left the room, and the council was without a quorum, but Alderman Kenyon arrived and made up a quorum. The finance committee's report, recommending payment of salaries and accounts amounting to £973 18s. 2d., was adopted. A letter was received from the Colonial Secretary's Office, stating that the Municipalities Act of 1866 would come into force in the borough on the 1st December next. The inspector of nuisances was ordered to bring up a report on the sanitary condition of the various dairies, slaughter-yards, and poultry farms in the municipality. Several small sums were voted for improvements. Mr. G. E. Young has been appointed acting council clerk, pending the decision of Mr. M'Manis's case.

PICNIC.

The annual picnic of the teachers and scholars of St. Mark's School, Granville, was held on All Saints Day. The party mustered in the church at 9 a.m., when a short service was held. The march to the railway station was really a pretty sight. The train soon brought the party to Strathfield, where it was necessary to change into cars on the Northern line. The scenery around the river and the bridge at Ryde were viewed with interest. At Ryde station the party left the train, and the day was pleasantly spent in the usual sports in the large and beautifully timbered grounds kindly placed at the disposal of the party by Mrs. Darvall. The party reached home about half-past 6 o'clock, well pleased with the day's event.

CREDITORS' LOSSES BY BANKRUPTCY.

Creditors in England and Wales lost by bankruptcy proceedings last year (says the P. M. Gazette) no less a sum than £7,115,000. But this does not show the whole of the losses caused by defaulting debtors. The annual loss by private arrangements is estimated at £2,720,000, which brings the total loss last year up almost to ten millions sterling. Although the amount is so large it falls far short of the annual losses from bankruptcy alone prior to 1883, when the present Bankruptcy Act was passed. Going back ten years, the net estimated losses to creditors through bankruptcy were as under:—1878, £23,392,000; 1879, £22,111,000; 1880, £12,712,000; 1881, £14,088,000; 1882, £15,052,000; 1883, £16,946,000; 1884, £10,915,000; 1885, £6,878,000; 1886, £5,920,000; 1887, £7,115,000. The proportion of assets to liabilities is much greater under private arrangements than under proceedings in bankruptcy, for, while the proportion under the latter has ranged, during the last four years, from 29 to 37 per cent., the proportion under the former is at the rate of 55 per cent. Those who administer the Bankruptcy Act claim that this result is mainly due to the increased desire on the part of the debtors to avoid the searching investigations to which they are subject under the Act. The figures given above, it should be noted, do not include the losses caused by the insolvency of limited liability companies, as to which no statistics are at present available. The failures of publicans and hotelkeepers, who head the list of trade defaulters, have been steadily rising, being 285 in number in 1885, 331 in 1886, and 342 in 1887. Builders' failures have also increased in a similar manner, the numbers during the three years being respectively 239, 255, and 289. There has been a large amount of speculative building, conducted chiefly upon borrowed money, and characterised in some cases by extreme recklessness. Farmers, who, as a class, have suffered severely in past years, show a diminution in the number of bankruptcies to the extent of about 11 per cent. on 1886.

During the last severe thunderstorm in St. Petersburg one of the eikons (says a London paper) was struck by lightning, and the coins, which were on a plate before it, were impelled by the force of the electric fluid so as to form a circular shape round the holy picture. The incident has been regarded by the lower classes as a miracle, and thousands of peasants and merchants from different parts of Russia are daily visiting the image and making their offerings.

SHIPPING REPORTS, &c.

CUSTOM HOUSE.—Entered outwards: November 6, Barrangarry, ketch, 71 tons, Captain T. H. Percival, for Bowen (Q.); Marshall S., schooner, 179 tons, Captain F. Enright, for Apia and Navigator's Island, via Newcastle; Dingadee (s.), 393 tons, Captain Osborne, for Brisbane; R.M.S. Britannia, 3145 tons, Captain Hector, for London, via ports; Sir Walter Raleigh, ship, 1492 tons, Captain Meston, for London; Burrumbeet (s.), 1581 tons, Captain G. G. Lee, for Cooktown, via ports.

The barque Sea Nymph was reported as at Bowen, from Sydney, on the 30th ultimo, and the schooner Mary Peverley.

The Just in Time, from Sydney, was at Port Pirie on the 29th ultimo.

The barque Excelsior left Auckland for Sydney on the 2nd instant, via Whangaroa, where she loads a kauri pine cargo.

The barques Grasmere and Zodiac are due early from Kaipara, with kauri pine cargoes, having left that port October 29.

The well-known New Zealand trader Lady Jocelyn, famous, it is said, for having made a greater number of voyages between that colony and London than any other sailing ship afloat, has started from Wellington once more for the Thames, with a general cargo, including a large quantity of frozen mutton. Her owners intended upon her arrival from home last voyage to convert her into a refrigerating storeship for meat, but the accident to the Pleione and another of their ships interfered with the arrangement. She is an iron hull, with upper deck and top sides of wood, and was formerly a steamer (the Brazil) prior to embarking in the Anglo-New Zealand trade. She registers 2138 tons, and is now 36 years old.

The China Navigation Company's steamer Taiyuan arrived at Auckland from Foochow October 31. She has cargo for the southern ports of the colony, and was reported as likely to load coal back to Hongkong at Westport, N. Z.

Late New Zealand shipping news includes the arrival of the barque Hampshire from New York at Port Chalmers, the Himalaya, ship, from Liverpool, and the ship Margaret Galbraith, from London, all at Port Chalmers prior to October 29. The barque Thurso, from Mauritius, arrived at Lyttelton about the 1st instant; the Devonport, barque, from Newcastle, and the schooner Welcome, from Rockhampton at Auckland prior to the 2nd instant. The barque Camana, from Sydney, arrived at Timaru on November 2.

The shipmasters are on the tiptoe of expectancy as to the result of the ballot which will decide whether the Newcastle miners will or will not accept the terms offered them. There are now 72 deep-water sailing ships and barques lying in the port of Newcastle, some of which have been there since July last. The total tonnage in port (net register) amounts to some 85,000 tons, equal to a carrying capacity of 115,000 to 120,000 tons in round figures. At Melbourne there are known to be 14 ships which have arranged to load there, their aggregate tonnage amounting to 17,500 tons register; and at Sydney there are five vessels, equal to 4000 tons register fixed to load. Doubtless there are others at both these ports, but only those whose destination has been declared are here noticed. Thus, taking the three ports named, we have an immediate demand for about 150,000 tons of coal without taking any cognisance of the shipping to arrive at the various colonial ports (just now unusually large), nor of tonnage from outside ports, the conditions of whose charters preclude their loading elsewhere than at Newcastle. From this it will be seen how important a favourable decision is regarded, and how anxious owners and masters are on the subject. Since the strike commenced it is estimated from pretty reliable information that 50,000 tons of deep-water shipping has been diverted from the port of Newcastle by alterations in charters and by the direction of owners. The estimate is regarded as rather under than over the mark. The tonnage at Calcutta alone has been augmented by at least 15,000 tons of shipping, which have gone up there in ballast from other ports rather than to Newcastle to await the termination of the strike.

The steamer Kiama left Moruya at 7.30 a.m. on the 5th instant, called at Bateman's Bay and Ulladulla, passed Jervis Bay at 7 p.m., and arrived at the company's wharf at 7.30 a.m. on the 6th. Cargo: 30 bags bacon, 500 cheese, 20 cases eggs, 5 bundles leather, 10 bags leather, 110 kegs butter, 2 bundles sheepskins, set diving gear, 8 coops fowls, 60 calves, 70 pigs, and sundries.

The Te Anau, for Auckland, leaves on Friday, instead of to-morrow.

The North German Lloyd steamer Nurnberg will leave for Bremen to-morrow.

The Union Company's steamer Waihora returned from Newcastle yesterday, and left in the afternoon for Wellington.

The clipper ship Rodney, bound from London to Sydney, and now 83 days out, passed Wilson's Promontory yesterday. The Rodney brings a large general cargo, and is consigned to Messrs. A. Lamb and Co.

The steamer Coraki crossed the Richmond River bar at 10 a.m. on the 4th instant, and arrived in Sydney at 4 a.m. on the 6th. Experienced fresh N.E. winds during the day, and southerly winds during the night, with hazy weather. Cargo: 20 cedar logs, 510 sacks 223 bags and 100 mats sugar, 75 kegs butter, 127 sacks maize, 17 hides, 24 pigs, 21 cases eggs, 9 coops poultry, 20 sacks oysters, and sundries.

The navigating of the yacht Era from Sydney to Melbourne has taken a new turn. The captain engaged to take her down has now resigned, and Mr. Milson has secured the services of the chief officer of the ship Gretna who will take advantage of the first slant of a northerly breeze and get round to the Southern capital.

The ketch Barrangarry, which made a trip up to Bowen some time since from Sydney, proceeded to Nambucca River and loaded a cargo of timber coastwise for Sydney. She is now fixed for a return cargo for Bowen, and will leave probably in a few days.

The barque Firth of Clyde, from Newcastle, is reported by cable to Messrs. Mason Brothers, Limited, as having arrived at San Francisco on the 31st ultimo.

By advices received by Messrs. Mason Brothers, Limited, it appears that the four-masted ship Port Jackson, from San Francisco to Sydney, is out 48 days to-day, and Captain Crombie hoped that he would be here by the 15th instant, provided he had a good run down. The ship, however, is foul, not having been docked for some time, and consequently she is not expected to arrive before the end of this month.

The Remonstrant, barque, from Maryborough; Adam W. Spiers, barque, and Zuleika, ship, from Sydney, were yesterday added to the tonnage in port at Newcastle.

The R. M. P. and O. steamer Coromandel arrived at Suez on the 5th instant, from Australia.

The R. M. P. and O. steamer Carthage arrived at Plymouth on the 4th instant, from Sydney, via ports.

The E. and A. Company's steamer Guthrie passed Gabo Island yesterday at noon, for Sydney, from Adelaide.

The American ship Merom, Melbourne to Newcastle, passed Gabo Island yesterday.

The sailing tonnage here at present on the berth for London amounts to 21,539 tons register; No. of vessels, 16. At the corresponding date last year the figures were 14,043 tons; No. of vessels, 10. The names of the vessels now on the berth are:—Alexander Lawrence, Brilliant, Carleton, Cicero, Colwyn, Deveron, Gretna, Illawarra, Lord Lyndhurst, Nebo, Sir Walter Raleigh, Sophocles, Thomas Stephens, Torridon, Trafalgar, Yallaroi.

Yesterday morning the E. and A. Company's steamer Menmuir, Captain Helms, returned to Sydney from Eastern ports with a full cargo and a few passengers. Upon this occasion she is first from Singapore, which port she left on the 7th ultimo, thence to Segal, Java. Left on the 14th ultimo, and on to Sydney, via Port Darwin, October 23, Thursday Island October 27, and Brisbane the 4th instant. Since her last departure from here for China no change whatever has occurred in the personnel of her officers, and she, on being berthed at the company's wharf, Miller's Point, yesterday, presented the same trim-like appearance she has upon all of her many previous visits. Her cargo comprises consignments to all the colonies, and after she has put out her Sydney portion she will go on to Melbourne, and very probably will extend to Adelaide. Coming down the Gulf she met with fresh trades, and for the remainder of the passage the usual run of moderate winds, with very fine weather.

The barque Parsee is taking in part shale cargo for San Francisco.

The yacht Miranda, bound to Melbourne from here, was signalled 10 miles north of Wollongong, beating to the southward, yesterday.

The ship Ardencluthа was expected to complete her loading last night or by to-day. Her orders are reported to be for San Francisco instead of Wilmington.

Of vessels fixed here yesterday Mr. John Williams reports the barque Cicero, now discharging a general cargo from Antwerp to load wool and general for London at Sydney. Mr. H. B. Hughes fixed the schooners Monarch and Hastings to load scrap iron, Brisbane to Sydney. The barque Heather Bell is fixed for flour, Adelaide to Noumea; she is at present at Adelaide. The schooner Louie comes from Townsville to Sydney to Mr. G. J. Waterhouse. The destination of the ship Glenalvon is Newcastle from this port, to load most likely for Rangoon. The barque King Malcolm is now to take southern coal here for San Francisco.

Yesterday the dismasted barque Seiriol Wyn was surveyed, and the repairs to her will be pushed ahead at the earliest possible moment. It will be necessary to discharge part cargo and put the vessel in dock, but no time is to be lost in getting her ready for sea and starting her on her journey round the Horn for the Channel.

The regular island trader Lizzie cleared for the Solomon Group yesterday, and will leave to-day.

The barque Chasca, for San Francisco, proceeds to sea to-day.

It is seldom indeed that so much southerly weather is experienced along this coast as has been the case for the past week without producing very much better results in the way of oversea shipping arrivals.

The steamer Tartar, bound to Sydney from Hongkong, arrived at Brisbane yesterday.

The barque reported to the southward of the Heads yesterday evening proved to be the William Turner, for Newcastle from Wallaroo. She passed north at dusk.

A four-masted ship, bound north, passed Green Cape yesterday, and a ship in deep trim; also the ship Suakim, in ballast, from Melbourne to Newcastle.

The four-masted ship Crofton Hall is to be towed from Moore's Wharf to an anchorage in the stream to-day.

The ship Harland, from Newcastle, arrived at Singapore October 4. On same date there were in port the American barque Evir Reed, from Newcastle, loading for Boston, and the J. W. Gildemeister, German ship, from Newcastle, loading for New York.

The steamer Mogul left Melbourne for London yesterday.

A. Currie and Co.'s steamer Bucephalus, Calcutta to Sydney via ports, left Adelaide for Melbourne yesterday.

The Port Fairy steamer this trip comes from Calcutta, specially chartered. She left Adelaide yesterday for Melbourne.

It is expected of a shipmaster that he shall furnish at least a reasonable explanation should he have the misfortune to lose the vessel placed in his command. Whether the following cause of a wreck comes within the scope of a reasonable explanation depends chiefly upon the private judgment of the person expressing the opinion. It is an extract from a Borneo paper of a recent date:—"At 4 a.m. on the 24th September the schooner Sri Sarawak, 77 tons, owned by Hj Talip, foundered off Tanjong Sirek. The crew were picked up by the Sri Laut. The Sri Sarawak was from Tatau for Kuching, with full cargo of rattans. The master states that the ship did not leak and he experienced no bad weather. He attributes the accident to evil spirits." Whether the Marine Board of Borneo would deal with the captain's certificate under the circumstances is not stated.

THE WEATHER.

There was a decided change yesterday morning in favour of a lower temperature, the light wind prevailing being from the southward. The sky was more or less overcast throughout the day, with every appearance in the early part of the evening of rain. The southerly wind held steadily until midnight, and had increased in strength to a moderate breeze.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—I am a member of the Civil Service, and am, therefore, in the opinion of the general public, a person not entitled to any consideration or sympathy whatever. I do not quite understand why this should be, as I am conscious that I work longer hours, and have more to worry me in performing my public duties, than is the case with my friends who are engaged outside the service, and who seem to get very much better pay. For ever so many years I went along receiving the same salary. Applications for an increase were met with promises that the matter should be considered when the next Estimates were prepared. After a time this excuse was altered to another. A Civil Service Bill was about being introduced which would ensure fair play to all. A board would be established which would carefully deal with the merits of the officers, regulate promotion, and prevent patronage by political influence. And so I went on hoping. At length came an increment (as it is called), subject, however, to a deduction reducing it to exactly £7 after years of service—the said deduction being made for the purpose of giving me a pension when I am 60—an age which I have slender hopes of attaining. Another increment followed on the 1st January, 1886, and the total increase amounted to £26, after many years' service, during which my duties increased admittedly 100 per cent. Since then no more increments; but lots of abuse, threats to take away the increment, and so on. On looking over the Estimates for 1889, I note that some individuals are down for "rises." I do not want to say anything about the capabilities of these lucky dogs; but I cannot help wondering how they manage it. Some time ago (Plancus consulo) a certain distinguished public officer, who rarely by any chance was found in his office, explained his success thus: "—— the office; I go round beating up political influence." The present Premier has times out of number held forth about a Civil Service Bill which would stop political patronage, regulate promotion, &c.,—not the sort of Acts which he has destroyed, but a very superior article. Where is it? Surely we have all waited for it long enough. Personally, I have no desire to settle down into fossilhood. I really do not wish to become a loafer; but what encouragement is there for a man to display energy under the present miserable conditions? Another specious excuse is now displayed. Wait until the Commission reports, &c. But I am not so youthful as in days of yore, and my store of hope is nearly exhausted. With grey hair (rather thin on the top, as my barber has it), and with hostages to fortune, I am beginning to find the struggle wearisome. My experience is that whether I do my work well, or whether I just perfunctorily crawl along, I get just the same, and no prospect of more. When vacancies offer promotion, who get the chances? And now one word with respect to our protection—the Civil Service Board. I believe it consists of the top branches of the Civil Service tree—of gentlemen enjoying salaries of nearly £1000 per annum, who extract another £100 apiece for the discharge of certain visionary duties.

When a certain dignitary of the church was asked to state what were the functions of an archdeacon, he could vaguely say that they consisted in the discharge of archidiaconal duties. And no one can say what are the particular functions of a member of our Civil Service Board. One thing is very certain—that the members do not perform the work which they are paid to do. The public service as a body have no faith in them, and those who have attempted to obtain any legitimate right through their intervention are not likely to repeat the experiment. Might I ask you, sir, to jog their memories respecting clause 54 of the Act. It says, referring to the 4 per cent. deduction now screwed out of us, "At the expiry of three years an actuarial investigation shall be made, &c., and if the account does not require an annual contribution of 4 per cent. on the officers' salaries, such contribution may be reduced," &c. Now this actuarial investigation should have been made in January last and the result made known. I believe about a month ago someone advertised for an auditor for this purpose: but the Act distinctly said that this investigation should have been made at the expiry of the third year, which took place in December, 1887. Is not all this disheartening? What inducements are there to do your duty? When the public dub us "loafers," are there not extenuating circumstances in our favour? Personally I am only an insignificant person; but

HABET ET MUSCA SPLENEM.

SYDNEY AS A BEAUTIFUL COMMERCIAL CITY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—While planning and building a city to meet the requirements of a commercial port, let us give timely heed how best to make use of those natural features now surrounding us. Power and artistic ability will be largely sacrificed by those architects to whom, as time rolls on, the building of this city will be entrusted if the general outlines and disposition of the various areas of the city be left to chance or the cruel hand of utilitarianism. "Every street which is constructed in obedience to our requirements, and fashioned according to the measure of our appreciation of true art, will remain a monument by which our successors will judge of our ability and disposition." It must be admitted by all that the present is a very important foundation period for the future life of this city. Those who will but give a few moments' serious thought to this subject of city improvement cannot fail to see how much we are doing and allowing to be done by indifferent men. With all due respect to our past and present City Fathers, I venture to affirm that the city is now growing to be of sufficient importance to warrant a radical change in our municipal administrators. No doubt the city councillors have laboured faithfully to the extent of their ability; yet would it not be graceful on our part to now release them from all further service, and gracious on their part to assist and encourage more able and better qualified men to take up the work when they lay it down. However, all credit to our worthy aldermen that they have so promptly and in season raised their voices in opposition to the proposition of our streets being made use of for railway purposes. The railway extension question is the most important one that is to be recorded in the archives of the city. The whole character and design of the metropolis will be for all time to come moulded by the adjustment of our railway extension to the city. Then let our national spirit (if we have any) prompt us to have a thought for these national measures, and "be up and doing," fully realising that our "successors will justly judge of our ability and disposition." To bring the railway from Redfern in a direct straight line through the city (above or below ground), in accordance with the wishes of a large number of the people—such a route will have the damaging effect of splitting the city into two sections, while robbing it of many beautiful features, destroying the present seclusion of our parks, Domain, and Botanic gardens, and further interfering with a semi-business section of the city, which should be protected as much as possible from commercial bustle and noise. While we are bound to fully provide for all commercial requirements of the metropolis, we must not let the ultra-utilitarian hand get to the "helm." If that be once permitted, then all that might be made enjoyable, with everything that is beautiful about the metropolis, will "go by the board." If the railway extension from Redfern take the shore of Darling Harbour, crossing the proposed new formed city area (see my letter in your issue of 31st ultimo) to the Circular Quay, thence to Woolloomooloo Bay, and back to Redfern, all commercial and general city traffic by steam power would be met, leaving the general area of the city to be traversed by cable or electric tramcars—not such ugly two-deckers as at present, making the city hideous. What can be more comfortable and "shipshape" than the Melbourne tram service? If, however, we can harness up electricity to our tramcars, then we should be relieved of that volcanic rumble the Melbourne public are subjected to during the still hours of night and early morning. By keeping the steam-power railway service over to the west side of the city, commercial noise and bustle would be confined to that special locality, while all that area of the city bounded by Pitt-street, King-street, the Domain, and Circular Quay would then be the exclusive home for all our public offices, learned societies, clubs, private offices, hotels, and town residences. This belt of the city, occupied thus by semi-commercial and non-commercial purposes, would be a permanent future barrier to any encroachment upon our recreation grounds and gardens. Those few commercial buildings now in the vicinity of the east side of the quay will all in time take their trade to the Darling Harbour side of the city; the Custom-house receiving its walking-ticket, with the rest, for some spot near Dawes Point.

No further encroachment need or should be made on the Government House Domain. When the railway terminus is fixed at the Circular Quay, the harbour service will be so increased as to necessitate setting apart the whole of the east side of the quay for harbour steamers. I am, &c.,

November 5. J. HORBURY HUNT.

The relation of sewer-gases to scarlet-fever and diphtheria, which has been regarded as obscure, if not doubtful, seems (say the St. James's Gazette) to be strikingly shown by a letter from Mr. A. R. Carter, of the Health Department of Baltimore to the Scientific American. Mr. Carter says that during a period of 54 years, from 1830 to 1883, there were 12,197 deaths in Baltimore from scarlet fever—an average of 226 per year. In 1883, 324 fatal cases of scarlet fever occurred, and taking into consideration the increase of the city in population, this may perhaps be taken as the normal number under the conditions then existing. On the 1st of January, 1884, an ordinance for the regulation of plumbing went into effect, and has since been in force with tolerable strictness. During the year 1884 there were 104 deaths from scarlet fever, or less than one-third as many as the year before. In 1885 the number was 68, or about one-fifth that of 1883. In 1886 there were 32 fatal cases, and in 1887 36, the mortality for these two years, after the administration of the ordinance had begun to produce some effect, having been only about one-tenth as great as that of 1883, the year before it was adopted. This extraordinary success, considered in connection with the Detroit experiments in disinfecting the sewers, points plainly to the way in which the most dangerous of children's diseases may be kept under control, if not extirpated entirely, and the public will wait anxiously the next step which sanitary science may make in this direction. As at Detroit, the Baltimore health department found that the mortality from diphtheria was greatly influenced by the enforcement of the new law. During the seven years prior to 1883, the average number of fatal diphtheria cases in the city was 469 annually. Since 1883, although for the first year or two the ordinance could not have received sufficiently extensive application to be very effective, the annual average has been 234, or almost exactly one-half of the previous average.

SECOND EDITION.

THE MELBOURNE CUP.

[By Telegraph.]
(From our Special Reporters.)

GENERAL DESCRIPTION.

MELBOURNE, Tuesday.

"Its the —— condition does it." So said a rather seedy-looking gentleman who stood beside me when the great effort was over, and the numbers were up which proved the fact of which we had already ocular demonstration, that Mentor had won the blue ribbon of Australian racing. I suppose that he was right, but then condition is a relative term. Trials are not always a guide in anything. No man and no horse can be counted upon to beat his own record when the supreme moment comes at which we want to be sure that he can beat or even equal his record, otherwise racing, whether we depend upon man or beast, could be reduced to an almost exact science, and most likely we should cease to take any interest in it. Horses, perhaps, as well as men may suffer from indisposition, of which the animal can say nothing, and of which he might be ignorant, and even though conscious of it, could not explain. Perfection of digestion, goes for much, and the perfect digestion of the last feed before the great race may make the difference of who can tell how many lengths in such a race as that which was run to-day. But we must be disposed to conclude that perfect digestion is a part of perfect condition, and agree with my unknown friend that it is the —— condition that does it, other things being equal; but we must go back a little. The race, which has just been decided in some three minutes and a-half, that event which at the moment is being telegraphed to half the cities of the civilised world, which will help to fill the London papers this evening for our friends at home, and which will crop up in the smoking-room talk of every club from America round the world, has been counted upon for days merely, by some for weeks, by some for months, by others even for years, and for days past all Melbourne has been disturbed by the approaches of the Cup fever. The city was full before the season of the Spring Meeting, but of late visitors have been arriving every day literally in thousands. Where they have all gone to where they eat and sleep nobody seems to know. Hotels and coffee palaces, and most of the better class of lodging and boarding houses were full before their arrival, and the new comers have wandered hopelessly and miserably from place to place until that end which comes to all troubles has arrived for them, and they have been accommodated with that awful resting place known as a shake-down. Yesterday matters reached their climax. Everybody had arrived who was coming, and Melbourne they say was more full of people than it had ever been before. It cannot be said that the day before the Cup is a day of promise. The sky is heavy with clouds, and rain falls with scarcely any intermission, but nevertheless as the evening closes in we feel a stir and fever of expectation. Everywhere, scarcely anybody escapes from it, and I cannot envy him who is unaffected by the strange contagion, the individual emotion reinforced and intensified by that of the mass. Quiet men feel a wild desire to go into dissipation, which may surprise them, by-the-bye, but which now seems not only the actual but the irresistible satisfaction of a dominant necessity. One cannot stop at home; we must be out and about, if only in the streets, but we prefer lights, and gaiety; and men crowd taverns and theatres, and all places where there is movement, and noise and bustle. We keep away from all ordinary restrictions. Bourke-street, and the neighbouring thoroughfare are ablaze with lights, under which a black mass of human beings come and go, lighted up here and there where the myriad faces are emphasized for a moment by the electric light, or as they pass across the bright patches which mark the windows of the larger restaurants or bars. The common phrase, "a buzz of conversation," no longer has any meaning. From that crowd there comes, if you listen to it, a low inarticulate roar, out of which every now and then starts some single word or sentence, which you find yourself repeating minutes afterwards without any idea whence it came, or why it stays by you. Alcohol, of course, is celebrating its usual triumph as it always does in times of excitement. We treat our fever in that way. The short sharp report of corks comes from every direction, for men think less to-night of champagne than they do at other time of gingerbeer; just as those who at the club and in other places are killing the evening and their own restlessness at the card tables, think nothing of stakes which would frighten them on other days. The devil must be busy in Melbourne to-night, but he will have still more to do to-morrow. But the morning comes somehow, and not a few are still awake to greet the sunrise. There is no time for headaches or heartaches; with the rest of our daily habits we must put them off until "after the Cup." We have made fools of ourselves; we have injured our fortunes or our lives; but we must think about them to-morrow morning not to-day, and the daylight steal quietly over a quiet Melbourne, a Melbourne very different from that which we saw last night.

THE MORNING OF CUP DAY.

The morning breaks slowly, for heavy masses of clouds still cover the sky, and it is doubtful whether we are to have a fine day or a wet one. The weather prophets, however, say that the sky will clear later on, and for once they are right. It is a curious experience, this, of Melbourne on the morning of Cup Day. We hear of Cup Day all the year round. Half one's Victorian acquaintances find an opportunity of bringing it into their conversation. Just as we are accused of doing in the case of our harbour. But without doubt the experience of the great race day is a unique one. We know the ordinary Sunday calm, and we know the dead and quiet of the ordinary bank holiday; but this is like neither of them. Sundays and bank holidays have their own quiet and their own bustle about railway stations and landing stages; but to-day, except where are the first stirrings of the great race traffic, there is a calm which is as unlike the Sunday calm as the hot stillness of the air before a typhoon is unlike the airless quiet of the tropics when the sails flap idly as the ship rolls upon the swell, and one looks for nothing more exciting than the faint disturbance of a half-hour's breeze. Not such a calm this, for this is the stillness of expectation. The shops are shut, nearly all of them, but one somehow feels that the people behind those drawn blinds and closed shutters are idle, not because they have no business to do, but because there is something in hand more important than any common business. The wheels of the cab rattle over the deserted streets, the sun has got up long ago, but few people are stirring. One misses the familiar sights of the housemaid upon the doorstep, and the usual morning cries are silenced by the continual invitation to buy a "card of the races." It is not Sunday, and yet nobody is taking down the shutters of the shops or sweeping the refuse of yesterday into the quiet streets, and its dust into the eyes of the early prowler. There never was a Cup Day like this Cup Day, they tell me, and many think that we shall hardly see the like again. The Jubilee, the Exhibition, the mining boom, and half-a-dozen events of the like kind have come so close together that they have unsettled many minds. Everybody somehow has had a sneaking feeling that he ought to grow rich without trouble as many have grown rich, that he ought to have days of pleasure because many have days of pleasure, and though few expect to make their fortunes on the turf, many hope to pick up something, and try to get an instalment of what they feel they were done out of by the fall in shares at Broken Hill; and, besides, the town is packed full of holiday visitors who have contrived to square the duty of visiting the Exhibition with the opportunity of seeing the Cup.

THE CROWD AT THE RAILWAY STATION.

But beyond all these is the immense addition of those who come because they want to see the crowd which everybody has looked to see far greater than it ever was before; and the last class have swelled the attendance immensely, and have helped to make what they came to look at. But how give an idea of it at the railway station, even while one fights and struggles to get at the ticket window, and sees the crowd outside constantly growing? Although a continuous stream is passing into the station, one forms but a slight idea of the traffic with which the department has to deal, for it must be confessed, when due allowance is made for the tremendous strain, that the Victorian Department grapples with its difficulties with both energy and success. We don't have to fight for our ticket for more than 10 minutes, and five of these are, of course, occupied by the inevitable old lady who first buys the wrong tickets, and then begins to try how far the patience of the ticket-clerk and of her intending fellow-passengers will extend. We get them in a time which cannot be called unreasonable under the circumstances, and are directed to the train by an official, evidently a new arrival in the colonies, who says, "Ladies and gentlemen, this way: the others please go farther on." Inside the station the people are drawn up in rows awaiting the train, and when it comes into the station there is a short, sharp, but withal good-humoured struggle, and we go off with no standing room, and then we begin to get an idea of the numbers of those others who are not ladies and gentlemen. All down the platforms they stand in serried ranks as deep as the platforms themselves. Heaven and the Railway Department alone know how they are all to be accommodated; but accommodated they all are, sooner or later. I wonder who is the first man to arrive on the course, at what time he gets there, and what the feels like on his arrival? When I got there, at about half-past 11, the place was already so thronged—although the first race is not run before 1 o'clock—that it seemed as if many must have spent the night upon it, and one's time was divided between speculations upon the question of how they had all managed to get there, and how were the thousands who were arriving every few minutes to get back again. The grand stand and lawn in front were already crowded, and prudent persons were already beginning to consider the question of lunch. Up to 1 o'clock one may consider that there is little deserving special mention. The constant stream of arrivals goes on: passengers by train and travellers by road pour in steadily, and apparently without diminution, till well into the afternoon, one ceases to take any further notice of them. By 1 o'clock the lawn, the flat, and the hill are so crowded that the addition of a few odd thousands makes very little difference in the general effect. And what a spectacle it is! Where else can you see anything like it? There may be a larger number at Epsom upon Derby Day, but the numbers there do not come home to one as they do here. They are lost upon those wide downs. A statement of numbers generally has no meaning for us. The thing is so much more tremendous than the name when we are told of 140,000 people, and at a rough guess I fancy there must be fully that number here. The words give us no definite idea, to see the people as one here can from the stand over by the Birdcage—the close-packed hill, with its seething masses, which are so pressed together that from this distance there does not seem to be a hand's breadth of room to spare anywhere, the dense throng in the paddock, the bright grand stand and the lawn, and over them the mass of people upon the flat, one thinks of a great battle, and of what it means, and realises, perhaps for the first time, the cost of some of the great victories of the world. But the most striking fact, the thing which distinguishes this crowd from all others in the world, is this,—Search as you will, you will hardly find one really ragged coat in all the throng, one mouth that really knows what it is to have a mere temporary lack of bread. Those, moreover, who have been upon other racecourses in different parts of the world will, indeed, wonder as they look in vain for the familiar rough and beggar. We have our own kind of roughs; we have our larrikins, but they are not as the roughs of other countries. One does not see any examples of the true civilised savage, and as he looks around he cannot but return to the old reflection that this is after all the country of all countries where the greatest number enjoy the greatest happiness, and must be compelled to draw the corollary that in spite of all revolutionary utterances, in spite of strikes and of growing republicanism, this land must, if its prosperity continue, become the most conservative country upon the face of the earth.

And then one returns to the idea of the crowd again, and cannot get away from it—to the thought of these acres and acres of close-packed human beings, each one of whom is an individual to whom the Universe and all it contains are summed up in a simple single-letter pronoun. We may pass through the crowd of bookmakers and their clients in the paddock. They are the same everywhere. The bird of prey cannot change his skin any more than the leopard, and if we are wise we have made our books when prices were longer than they are to-day. Who could look at that grand stand and not moralise about it, and yet who is there now whose moralisings would not seem flat, stale, and unprofitable? The story is written so large and so plainly that each can read it for himself, for, though this gathering is so mighty, we are still so small a community that we do not need to guess at the lives of many whom we see there. We know something about many of them—not much perhaps, because we cannot know all about the lives of even our nearest and dearest, but still we know enough to see that every kind of life that is led here is represented, just as we can see that there is every type of face, from the high-bred delicate beauty of fair women whom we must not name, to the coarse greed-stained features of that Semitic money-lender who stands looking round upon the harvest-field which he knows is ripening for him to-day. But I see no tragedies here such as we sometimes read of. Great generals we have been told have often had the power of throwing off their anxieties, and of sleeping quietly only an hour or two before a great battle, and very ordinarily have a knack of casting their cares aside though it may be but for an hour or two. We don't sit biting our nails and brooding before the race is run, which is perhaps to decide whether our lives are to be spent in comfort or in penury. We talk and laugh and flirt, and put the cupboard upon the skeleton and don't unlock it again till the horses are coming down the straight, and then, perhaps, the spectre comes out, and has a look at us for a moment, but we soon chase him away with a glass of champagne, and postpone the serious interview till to-morrow. No, I see no tragedies here. Whatever the everyday lives of these men and women may be they are thinking of little but commonplace enjoyment to-day. Many of them may have to meet some of the numerous bills of life to-morrow, but to-day is a day of grace. This crowd must contain its proportion of despairing lovers, but they have forgotten to despair and even to be jealous. Magdalen is here, but she has dried her tears. That man over there went in heavily for the rise, and was just in time for the fall. That woman was the day before yesterday subjected to that most unforgetable of pains until assuaged—a snub, but she has forgotten all about it. Only a few, perhaps, remember their everyday interests, and look about wistfully for a long-hoped-for presence—for the face which will turn this racecourse of Flemington into a very Garden of Eden. People talk of this season as the carnival of Melbourne, and they are right. This Tuesday may, indeed, lead on to a Wednesday to be spent in sackcloth and ashes; but while it lasts people forget yesterday and to-morrow, and think only of the present time, but, in fact, the proportion of those who will be seriously affected by the day's transactions is small enough. The betting much more in accordance with the means of the majority than are the dresses of people of what is called the better sort. The kind that pays for a ticket for the grandstand may be divided into two classes. They can only be indicated by description. The one calls its friends "men and women," the other "gentlemen and ladies." The gentlemen and ladies here form the large majority. The gentlemen are fond of rings, the ladies like jewellery and over-dressing in the day time, and jewellery and underdressing in the evening. The crowd is, in fact, as miscellaneous as a crowd of persons generally well-to-do can be, but there is no lack of society suited to every kind of taste. The genial Governors of New South Wales and Victoria, Lady Loch, and their suites and friends are in the centre of the grand stand, though many a visitor from New South Wales, and it may be many a Victorian, misses the gracious presence of Lady Carrington. All society, both of New South Wales and Victoria, is here, saving only that portion of it which has remained at home; and he must be friendless indeed who can walk along the terrace in front of the stand without meeting scores of acquaintances who greet him with that superabundant warmth which we are apt to bestow upon those with whom we are accustomed to associate in one place, or by chance meet them in another. Everybody makes a brave show. It is not possible for the masculine eye to properly appraise the value of the feminine dress, but methinks there are many here who this evening will have the happiness of thinking that they have exercised a careful economy in order to make a brave show to-day, and that, after all, the crush was so great that they were unseen by all but mere men and other persons of little account.

Among minor matters we may note that there is a large provision for liquid refreshment, the usual array of dirty glasses, bad spirits, and fetid water. Under the grandstand is a luncheon that seems to be fairly adequate and good, when the strain which is placed upon the contractors' resources is considered, but those of us who have been fortunate enough to get an invitation have no doubt preferred to join one of the pleasant parties that surround the tables under the awning, from which, if perchance we were inclined to grow cynical before, we came away, in a kindlier spirit, to look again at the grand stand and recognise the real wholesome enjoyment of those who occupy it, and to wonder whether female loveliness is more lovely in its southern summer drapery or when set in a northern frame of furs.

THE HILL.

The hill which is a feature wholly peculiar to Flemington must be described by one who has not seen it except from afar. To-day, one can see nothing of it, for the back, the only approachable portion, can hardly be considered to have any definite relation to Cup day unless perhaps in one particular. I saw there the only drunken man I saw all day, and the only approach to rowdyism. The rush of the crowd after the Hurdle Race down the bank behind was so sudden and so irresistible that if anyone had fallen he must certainly have been trampled to death. The moral of a visit to the hill appears to be that upon a Cup Day it is better to go somewhere else. The crowd is good-tempered enough, but careless, and carelessness which carries with it the crushing force of tens of thousands of people is neither harmless nor amusing. Of the view from it at this point I can say nothing. There was not, as far as I can discover, any part of it from which, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, one can view anything except the sky, a few gaudily-dressed bookmakers, the unfortunate seal that is perennially exhibited as the great sea monster, and the backs of several thousands of human beings. On the whole the hill on a day like this is best when viewed from the rails in front of the grand stand, and as the great event of the day approaches, it is well that we should return there. How is one to convey any notion of the scene. The crowd begins to leave the lawn and paddock slowly at first, afterwards almost in a rush, and to throng the stand and hill, to press against the rails, and to almost fight for a place from which some portion of the finish may be seen. The crowd is so dense, that those who have failed to take the precaution of securing a place in good time, are in doubt whether they will be able to see the race at all, and some of them it is to be feared will never see it. Up here, above the grand stand, the sight is indeed an extraordinary one. Behind one is the back-ground, made up of a swaying mass of heads, with the stand upon the hill outlined against the sky; behind it, on the left, is the long lawn, with a broad, dark line of people along the rails, then an interval of green, over which groups and single figures come and go, and again, further from the rails, another black band of men and women, and beyond again the roofs of a thousand carriages that look like a small and deserted town. In front and below is a vast surging crowd, and then the broad riband of turf which marks the course. Far away down is a dim dusty band, at the starting-post, out of which the figures of horses and the bright caps of the jockeys flash for a moment, and then disappear as the starter calls them back again. Further in front a blackness stretching half round the inner rails, out of which show, in the sunlight, myriads of faces, bright patches of the colour of women's dresses, flags, and the sunshades of the bookmakers. Further beyond them is a broad stretch of green, over which lines of people seem to wander, and to make an irregular pattern as upon a carpet. Then there is a ring of low trees, and in the distance domes and spires and broken lines of houses and the masts and spars of ships, far away in Port Phillip Bay. The right bare hill is dotted with groups of people, who look on from a-far off, and who from here seem like the stumps left upon a half-cleared country. The paddock and the ring are deserted and silent, the thousands of busy feet have not trodden all the grass away from them, and one turns and looks at the green freshness of the trees, and almost thinks for a moment of a quiet English meadow. Over everything there is the bright serene glow of the declining sun and the fair peace and beauty of the cloudless Australian sky. But suddenly there is a cry which is taken up everywhere, "they're off," and the hum of the conversation that has been going on all round us becomes an excited chatter that reminds one of an infinite swarm of starlings. One wants to know who that is against the rails, and another says he has got a good position, and a third asks who it is that is outside, and one wakes up to the fact that the great event has been reached at last, and that we are looking at the grand struggle for the Melbourne Cup. The bright crowd of men and horses passes by and the talk that began with the mere sound of chatter grows and grows, until it becomes a low roar, and the horses sweep round, and at last come into into the straight again, and then there is a sound which grows louder and louder, and which can be compared to nothing because only a mighty gathering of men can make it. I hear a cry all round me, "Tradition wins," and then, in one of those moments of excitement which turn one cold, Mentor keeps his lead, and comes in the winner of the Melbourne Cup.

THE DRESSES.

The spring festivities of the Centennial year began in earnest last Friday, when his Excellency the Governor and Lady Loch entertained quite 3000 people at a garden party in the grounds of Government House. Although the weather was uncertain and threatening many very elegant toilettes appeared. Lady Loch wore the rich robe designed for her by Worth for the opening of the Centennial Exhibition, dark blue velvet, draped all over with little circles of light blue, and opening in front over a petticoat of faille français shot in the two blues; the gown made with demi-train and full sleeves, dark blue bonnet with light blue feathers. Lady Clark wore a trained dress of pale eucalyptus green silk, striped with brown and darker green, and with a front and vest of dark brown brocade, straw bonnet, with green and brown. Many of the most beautiful gowns worn at the garden party reappeared at the Derby or on the Cup Day: indeed, some ladies distinguished themselves for superior economy by donning the same garb all three days.

The dressing at the Derby was as a general rule exceedingly quiet. Brilliant colours were the exception. Designs were characterised by an absence of pretension; floral parasols were scarce. The same, unfortunately, cannot be said of Suede's shoes, which appear fated to be popular. The inquiring mind may well ask here why those with not very small feet should take to wearing light foot gear. On Derby Day Lady Loch wore a charming combination of ivory, white pongee silk and lace, with the most etherial of white tulle bonnets. The vice-regal party was weak in ladies on that day, comprising only, besides Lady Loch, Miss Darley and Miss Stawell. Miss Darley wore silk of deep coral pink, trimmed with coffee lace, and large straw hat. Miss Stawell some with green cashmere, and green bonnet; Lady Clark, pink and white striped satin front, and vest of cream satin, white tulle bonnet, filled with poppies. It is, however, on Cup Day in Melbourne that we look to see the glare of fashion and the mould of form. Then comes forth into daylight and observation all that has been secretly preparing for weeks and months. Then is definitely outlined and accurately laid down the main plan of what is to be worn for the next 12 months, and the lesson to be gathered from yesterday's display is that nous outrés femmes are happily becoming less the slaves of "use and wont" of one particular make or tint than they formerly were. There was to be seen on the lawn at Flemington this year more individuality—more spontaneity—in a word more freedom in dress, both as regards design and colouring, than ever before. The more artistic modes now prevailing are probably not one whit less expensive than the old red, blue, and green satins. They do not indicate less prosperity. It is to be hoped they mark rather the rising tide of civilisation and culture, refinement, and common sense going hand-in-hand, and to an Australian they are a sort of happy augury. The gathering was thoroughly intercolonial. There were present amidst the crowd, which was nearly twice as great as ever was seen at Flemington before, our English and Continental Exhibition visitors, but they were but a handful compared with the number of ourselves, gathered from all the Australasian colonies, and if the women of all the colonies are growing more sensible and more refined, as is indicated by their dress, is it possible to overestimate the beneficial effect upon this and the next generation of Australians? The fabrics worn at the Cup were as various as the styles, and ranged from the humblest cotton through the gamut by gamut of embroidered and unembroidered zephyrs and muslins, tweeds, and serges, cashmere, and tennis flannel silks, thick and thin up to the richest satins, and velvets. The great body of ladies, however, wore cashmere or liberty silk. The directoire costume, with its coat generally of rich watered silk, was patronised by many elegant matrons, but many more adopted the empire style, with its full bodies and becoming sashes, more or less modified to meet the exigencies of each case. Josephine frocks in washing materials, and sashes, were common amongst quite young girls. There was no dominant note in colour. Grey and green were both plentiful, so were pink and blue. White and yellow in various forms were by no means left out of court. There was an abundance of white, but the lawn did not in the least remind one of washing day as it did two years ago. Several elegant gray gowns were embroidered in silver, others trimmed with steel passementeria. Oriental embroidery seemed to have gone off a little. Floral parasols were few, and those matching the rest of the toilettes as few. Here and there, like a belated poppy in a cornfield, a red one was to be seen, but the vast majority were either so far black or brown or, with light dresses of cream, of the walking-stick variety. Of course, bonnets generally were of modest attitude. Hats were very numerous, and as lofty as ever, but not quite so much overladen with flowers as they have been.

The vice-regal party included his Excellency and Lady Loch, their Excellencies the Governors of New South Wales and South Australia, Miss Darley (daughter of Sir Frederick Darley), Miss Stawell (daughter of Sir William Stawell), the Misses Loch, Mademoiselle Dorenlot, Lord Hastings, the Hon. Rupert Carrington, Mr. Burroughes, and the suites of the Governors, including Captain Keith Falconer, Mr. Seymour Fort, Mr. Walington, Mr. Hatton Richards, and others. The tables in the Governor's private dining-room were exquisitely laid out with pale blue satin down the centre, and cardinal ribbon, on which, at intervals, were laid white flowers, dark red roses in low vases, and cloth of gold roses in higher ones, almost covered the rest of the table. A buttonhole bouquet in a tiny vase stood by each guest's plate. Included in the luncheon party, besides the names above mentioned, were Mrs. Malleson, Miss Chapman, Mr. and Mrs. Alec. Murphy, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Miller, Miss Anderson, Mr. and Miss M'Lean, and Mr. Beaumont. The Irishman who could not see the wood for the trees has passed into a proverb: but it is not a joke to say that yesterday it was impossible to see the gowns for the crush. Sometimes one hailed with satisfaction the vision of an acquaintance a few paces off, but, like Guido's angel, she was head only, or when one with infinite pains had struggled up to her she, like a tricksey sprite, had vanished. A vision of dazzling art of modiste or costumière would burst forth, but before the necessary apparatus for its mental photography could be brought to bear upon it, hey, Presto! it was gone. We give only a few noticeable gowns gathered at random. Lady Loch wore a superb gown of rich silk of serpent green, with bands of velvet of a darker shade and satin of dull orange, vest of white merveilleux, tuscan bonnet with green velvet and white aigrette. Miss Darley was attired in white liberty silk and lace, white tulle hat. Miss Stawell, cream liberty silk, richly trimmed with gold lace, cream tulle bonnet, with gold. Mrs. Malleson wore a handsome gown of green velvet opening to show petticoat and vest of cream merveilleux, draped with lace, cream tulle bonnet, with touches of dark green velvet. Lady Clarke was dressed in gobelin grey moire and satin petticoat, with directoire coat of moire. Miss Chapman and Mrs. Alex. Murphy both wore white. The Misses Loch were in cream liberty silk frocks, gathered on the shoulders and sleeves, straw hats, with white plumes. Mme. Dorenlot wore a blue liberty silk gown, black lace scarf, black lace bonnet, with marguerites. Miss Simson was attired in pink-and-white striped silk, with white tulle bonnet. Mrs. Benjamin (Mayoress of Melbourne), magnificent gown of black watered silk, much bejetted. Mrs. Maurice Benjamin wore a trained gown of pink and gold shot moire, with petticoat of embossed geraniums, red velvet; Miss Benjamin, green satin; Miss E. Manning, white liberty silk, trimmed with lace; Mrs. Balls Headley, redingote of black-watered silk, skirt of primrose satin veiled in black Chantilly lace, black lace bonnet with primroses, black moire parasol; the Misses Ward Cole wore cool-looking frocks of pale green and white striped silk, with white hats; the Misses Tweedale, white embroidered muslins; Mrs. Broomfield (Sydney), handsome black satin, and her daughter in white; Miss Cooper was attired in an elegant gown of white liberty silk, with panel vest collar and cuffs of guipure embroidery, and white tulle bonnet; Mrs. Edward Muller wore the directoire style in black and white moire, Mrs. Main (Sydney), black satin moire with pink bonnet; Miss Carrie Riddell, white liberty silk; her sister, Mrs. Stanley, white figure on blue ground, liberty silk with Empire sash of white moire ribbon; Mrs. Jenkins Collier in black merveilleux; Miss Collier in grey cashmere; Mrs. Joseph Clark in gobelin grey moire and satin; Lady Nicholson in brown silk; Mrs. Palmer (Miss Rosina Carandini) wore a sumptuous gown of fawn broche panels, and vest of pink satin, bonnet of pink and fawn; Miss Wallace, blue and white liberty; Miss Fischer (Sydney), very pale lavender silk, white tulle bonnet, lined with lavender; Mrs. White (Sydney), dark purple velvet opening over petticoat of pale lavender moire, bonnet of the velvet, trimmed with pansies in natural colours, gloves and parasol of lavender; Miss Maynard, grey cashmere and hat to match; Miss Simson, satin of the palest shade of duck-egg green, trimmed with gold embroidery; Mrs. Willie Menzies, sulphur muslin, relieved with sage green; Mrs. Moubray, handsome gown in the Empire style of gobelin gray, moire and brocade petticoat, covered with rich maltese cream lace; Mrs. Donald Wallace, pretty gown of soft cream and pink; Mrs. Reginald Stephen, gobelin gray cashmere, embroidered with silver-white tulle bonnet; Mrs. Elkington, gray-and-white striped surah, with over dress of gray material, dark-gray velvet bonnet with touches of pink, parasol trimmed with pink roses. The Baroness de Figely, in coral pink; Mrs. Byron Moore, white satin and dark blue velvet, vest and bows; Mrs. Foster Palmer (Queensland), shot pink and gray silk; Miss Quinlan, embroidered white muslin; Mrs. J. T. Hamilton, cream flannel, with moire panels and vest.

THE RACING.

Long before the horses were stripped for the opening event—the Hurdle Race—the birdcage, or, as it is correctly called, the saddling paddock, was crowded with eager spectators struggling to get a glance at their respective favourites. This cage idea is a happy one, and the sooner it is introduced at Randwick and Rosehill the better, as it relieves the ordinary paddock, and affords those who really wish to interview the equine candidates an opportunity of doing so in comfort. At first Incident made a high bid for the position of favourite, but friends of Blue Mountain rallying round him with unbounded confidence, he soon became a firm favourite at the short price of 6 to 4, at which they never tired of accepting, for the great horseman, Scobie, was in the saddle. Incident, who looked remarkably well, was next in favour at 5 to 2, and The Victim had a strong following at 4 to 1. The Victim and Ocean forced the pace until the latter was worn down. When half a mile from home The Victim made a final effort to maintain his lead, but Blue Mountain, coming like a racehorse, outpaced him, and, followed by Incident, won easily. The victory of the top-weight was well received, and there cannot be a doubt but that the handsome black is the prince of hurdleracers and steeplechasers at the present day. A comparatively small field of 14 out of 49 entries went out to contest the Railway Handicap, for which Plutarch and Teuton were most in request; but, though the former ran a great race, and flattered his friends at the distance, Tourbillon, who had met with support at 7 to 1, outpaced him cleverly at the finish, and won a pretty race by nearly a length. Plutarch had Huxley in the saddle instead of Hales, who wisely kept himself in reserve for the more important battles to follow, and the lad handled the son of Chester with great judgment, and placed him in such a position that he had a good fair run throughout; but Tourbillon, who is by Robinson Crusoe from Cracker, at last justified his breeding by coming when wanted, and winning with a trifle to spare. The dreaded scratching pen was very busy with the candidates for the Kensington Stakes, and at last only eight remained in to stand the chance of changing owners. Little Norman had the honour of leading for most of the journey; but he died out miserably when he reached the distance, where Pippo came through like an experienced tradesman, and, leaving his horses without an effort, won easily from Lady Agnes. Britomarte ran a good filly and finished well, but the winner was evidently a cut above the lot, and promises to see a better day. The winner was put up for auction, and was bought in for £435. The betting on this event was not extensive, and Little Norman was most in request at 7 to 4, while the followers of the Kirkham stable readily accepted 3 to 1 about Pippo. Lady Agnes, who is as pretty as a picture, met with some support at 4 to 1, and the others were friendless. When the warning bell rang for the Cup, of the 31 numbered on the book, only Enfilade, Pearlshell, and Bonnie Spec were struck out, so that a field of 28 went to the post to contest the great betting race of the year, on which speculation opened with spirit long before the horses were even saddled for the first race. Whakawai and Chicago were decided favourites at 5 to 1, and the strong support afforded the former was due to the great work he had been doing each morning at Flemington; while Chicago, who at the last was honoured by being a firm first favourite, owed his position to the workmanlike manner in which he had lowered the colours of the cracks in the Caulfield Cup. Both were examples of condition; but, though Whakawai played a prominent part from the back of the course to the home turn, neither was ever really dangerous, and Chicago was in trouble at a very early part of the struggle. The followers of Mr. Gannon's fortunes were greatly exercised to find the elected one, but when Power was seen on The Australian Peer, he had a very fair following, though the weight was sufficient to warn good judges off him. To the eye, Malua looked as well as he did when he won the Melbourne Cup four years ago, but after making some running, he faded away when little more than a mile from home. Mr. Cook's pair, The Yeoman and Cyclops, performed well, and after the latter had made a desperate attempt to cut down the field, The Yeoman came through like a locomotive, but his well-timed effort only served to get him third place. Bravo joined the first flight when half a mile from home, and was the first to turn into the straight, with Cyclops upon his quarters, and when their heads were turned for home, he looked more like a winner than anything in it; but there must be a weak spot near his heart, for when asked the final question, he melted away like ice, and left the battle to those who know no shirking. All through the race M. O'Brien had Mentor in a good place, and riding with the greatest coolness and judgment, he took his horse to the front at the distance, and stalling off a well-timed rush made by the over-stout Tradition, won with a trifle in hand by a length and a-half amidst the greatest excitement and applause. At one time, when less than 100 yards from home, it looked as though Tradition would outpace him, but the big fellow rolled heavily when beaten and could not get on terms, despite a resolute effort on the part of Aspinall. Mr. W. Gannon's colours were never prominent at any critical part of the race, and the running of Melos goes to show that the three-year-olds are not up to the average standard of excellence. Ensign was prevented from fairly playing his part out by snapping his off fore fetlock when rounding the bend, and all lovers of an honest racehorse will regret to hear that he had to be destroyed. The well-performed New Zealand mare, Spade Guinea, broke her shoulder when leading past the stand the first time round, and Harris had hardly dismounted when she staggered over towards the river bend, and went down for the last time. Her injuries were found to be of such a serious nature that she had to be shot, so that the Cup of '88 has not been a bloodless one, and will be made sadly memorable by the death of two equine celebrities. Dick Swiveller ran a good horse until that "leg" of his came against him, and when pulled up he could scarcely limp back to the paddock. Upon re-entering the paddock O'Brien was received with well-deserved round after round of applause. Mentor is by Swiveller from Nightmare, by Panic from Evening Star (imp.), by Lord Clifden, and was bred in Victoria by his owner, Mr. D. S. Wallace. He was not raced as a two-year-old; but during the last season he scored three winning brackets out of ten starts. His first essay in public was in the Maiden Plate, 1 mile, at the V. A. T. C. Spring Meeting, when he carried 7st. 7lb., and filled third place to Tranter 7st. 7lb., and Pakeha, 7st. 7lb., the journey occupying 1 minute 50 seconds. At the V. R. C. Spring meeting he carried 7st., and ran unplaced in the Hotham Handicap, 1½ mile and a distance, won by Menotti 6st. 11lb., with Keith 7st. 7lb., and Spade Guinea, 9st. 2lb., in the other places, the distance having been put past in 2 minutes 53¾ seconds. Before the close of the meeting, however, he passed out of the maiden class, for with 6st. 7lb. in the saddle he appropriated the Spring Handicap, 1½ mile, defeating The Levite, 8st. 7lb., by a length and a-half, with the Ragman, 6st. 10lb., a similar distance away, third, the course having been covered in 2 minutes 9¼ seconds. In the V. R. C. Foal Stakes, 1¼ mile, won by Cranbrook, 8st. 10lb., on the following day, with Niagara, 9st. 6lb., and Enigma, 8st. 5lb, in the other places, Mentor also started, but was unable to secure a place, and the journey was accomplished in 2 minutes 19½ seconds. At the Victorian Club November meeting held at Caulfield, Mentor, with 7st. 4lb. up, ran unplaced in the Victorian Club Cup, 1¼-mile and 264 yards, won by Gardenia, 8st. 4lb., with St. John, 7st. 9lb., and Remus, 7st. 13lb., in the other positions, the trip having occupied 2 minutes 27¾ seconds. At the Geelong February meeting he carried 7st. 2lb. in the Geelong Gold Cup, 1¾ mile, and was only beaten by a neck by Gardenia, 8st. 11lb., while E. D., 7st. 5lb., finished a length away, third, in 3 minutes 11 seconds. On the following day he fought out a duel with Boz in the Foal Stakes, 1½ mile, 8st. 10lb. each, and won by a couple of lengths in 2 minutes 42 seconds. At the V. R. C. Autumn Meeting, with 7st. 11lb. up, he secured the Brunswick Stakes, 1½ mile, beating The Yeoman, 7st. 7lb., easily by a length, with Escutcheon a head off third, in 2 minutes 8½ seconds. On the third day of the reunion, with 8st. 7lb. up, he ran second to Remus, 8st. 2lb., in the Free Handicap, 1¼ mile, and Whakawai, 7st. 12lb., finished third, the course having been negotiated in 2 minutes 11½ seconds. He wound up his three-year-old career by carrying 8st. 10lb. and running third to Ben Bolt, 8st. 13lb. and The Yeoman, 8st. 5lb., in the Place Handicap, 1¼ mile, on the last day of the V. R. C. autumn gathering, when the journey was cast behind in 2 minutes 8½ seconds. Mentor opened the current racing season auspiciously by appropriating the Caulfield Stakes, w.f.a., 1¼ mile and a distance, with 9st. in the saddle, coming home half a length in front of Cyclops, 9st. 4lb., who beat Ensign, 7st. 6lb., by a length for second place, in 2 minutes 28½ seconds. That performance brought him into prominence for the Melbourne Cup, for which he was promptly installed favourite, and since then the son of Swiveller held his own in the betting market. Tradition's performance was full of merit, for he was not more than three-quarters fit, and, moreover, has served at the stud for at least one season. That he would have won had he been thoroughly wound up there can scarcely be a doubt, and we have not yet seen half the best of him. He is by Richmond from Bridal Wreath (imp.), by King John from Bouquet, by Bay Middleton from Violet, by Melbourne, and was bred by Mr. Blackler, at his stud farm, Fulham Park, South Australia. Like Mentor, he was not raced as a two-year-old; and even as a three-year-old his performances did not foreshadow exceptional speed or endurance, for his only appearance in public was at the annual meeting of the Corowa (N. S. W.) Race Club in March last, when with 7st. in the saddle he defeated a field of five in the Corowa Handicap, 1¼ mile, with Creole, 6st., and The Arrow, 6st. 4lb., in the other places; and the Ladies' Bracelet, 1 mile 141 yards, in which he carried 7st. 2lb., and was followed home by Ravenstein, 7st. 2lb., Latona, 6st. 10lb., and five others. His first appearance as a four-year-old was in the Caulfield Cup at the V. A. T. C. spring meeting last month, when he afforded a great surprise by the style in which he finished next to Chicago, and the meritorious performance brought him into great demand for the principal betting event of the year, and for which he made such a determined bid. The hurdle horse, The Yeoman, quite bore out the expectations of his party, but the other exponent of the science of fencing, Malua, albeit a Melbourne Cup winner, made his effort far too early to be effective, but the position he held at the finish clearly establishes his right to be regarded as one of the foremost racehorses of the day. The Yeoman, who came home third, also saw the light in South Australia, where he was bred by Messrs. Robertson Bros., Turretsfield, and he is by The Englishman from Springtime, by Fireworks from Spring Blossom, by Fisherman from Minette (imp.), by Faugh-a-ballagh—a pedigree good enough for anything. The Yeoman did not carry silk as a two-year-old; and opened his three-year-old career at the Mooney Valley May Meeting, 1887, when with 6st. 7lb. he ran unplaced in the Broadmeadows Handicap, 8½ furlongs, won by Achmet, 7st. 8lb., in 1 minute 53 seconds. With 6st. up he ran third to Salvo, 7st. 9lb., and Strongbow, 7st. 5lb., in the Park Handicap, 1 mile 1¼ furlong, at the Elsternwick Park May meeting, when the journey was negotiated in 2 minutes 11¼ seconds. At the Moonee Valley June meeting, with 6st. 5lb. up, he took part, but ran unplaced in the Winter Handicap, 8½ furlongs, won by Childe Harold, 7st. 4lb. At Bowes Tattersall's Jubilee meeting in June, with an impost of 6st., he ran Ragman, 6st., to a head in the Cup, 1 mile 150 yards, the distance having been cast behind in 2 minutes 4 seconds. His first winning bracket was secured at the Jubilee meeting of the Victorian Club, when with 6st. 5lb. up he won the Club Handicap, once round, beating Ringmaster, 9st 1lb., by a head, while I O U, 7st. 9lb., came home third; and he followed up his success by winning the Grand National Hurdle Race, about 3 miles, at the V. R. C. Grand National Steeplechase meeting, carrying 9st. 8lb. home in front of Friction 9st. 12lb., and Darkness 9st. 12lb., in 6 minutes 25¾ seconds. Last season he faced the flag four times, and scored one win, in the Autumn Handicap, 1 mile 5 furlongs, at the V. R. C. Autumn meeting, when with a burden of 7st. 7lb. he finished a length and a-half in advance of Ben Bolt 8st. 9lb., and Moorhouse 8st. 5lb., the trip having been accomplished in 3 minutes 2 seconds. The undeniable defeat of Whakawai was another example of the fruitlessness of time trials, and his overthrow must have cost his party very dearly. It may be mentioned that in last week's Sydney Mail "Nemo" predicted that the places for the Cup would be filled by Bravo, Tradition, and Mentor, and Mr. Gannon's best, and as two out of those mentioned were first and second, the anticipation was not far from the mark. The pleasure of the day was greatly marred by the fate which befel Ensign and Spade Guinea, and it is doubtful if Dick Swiveller will ever face a flag again. Rudolph was justly entitled a great favourite for the Nursery Handicap, and patiently ridden by Hales, the son of the brilliant Martini-Henry won very easily, thus securing his second Nursery Handicap. A comparatively indifferent field went out to do battle for the Yan Yean Stakes, and Pakeha, piloted by Hales, defeated Plutarch by a length and a half, and so ended a first-class day's racing. A detailed account of the sport follows:—

Hurdle Race, a handicap sweepstakes of 5 sovs. each, with 300 added; second horse to receive 60, and the third 30 sovs. out of the stake. Betting: 6 to 4 v. Blue Mountain, 5 to 2 each Incident and The Victim, 10 to 1 bar three.

The Victim was the first to begin, and he led over the first fence, attended by Blue Mountain, Ocean, and Quilt. Blue Mountain was then steadied, and The Victim led past the stand by two lengths from Blue Mountain, while Ocean and Quilt were next in close order. Ocean joined The Victim at the bridge, and the pair showed the way along the back of the course. No material alteration took place during the next three-quarters of a mile, and when passing the stand, The Victim, who was going strongly, had a length advantage of Maroney, who was pulling hard, two lengths clear from Weathercock and Quilt, and after them at length intervals, succeeded Incident, Blue Mountain, and Landseer, all fencing admirably. Ocean got on terms with The Victim when going along the river bank, and led him half a length at the bridge, while the others packed, were whipped in by Blue Mountain and Landseer. When fairly at the far side of the course The Victim again drew away, and had an advantage of two lengths of Incident and Ocean when passing the abattoirs, where the others were racing in a bunch with Maroney, who was still pulling hard, last. A little further on, Ocean cried enough, and Incident went up second, and two lengths from him came Maroney, a length in front of Blue Mountain, who now began to forge to the front on the inside. The great running he had made now told on The Victim, and Incident began to trouble him, and then came Maroney, scarcely a length from Blue Mountain, who was still hugging the rails. Blue Mountain cut down the leaders at the entrance to the course proper, and, coming away, won very easily by a length from Incident. Maroney was third, 10 lengths off, and two lengths in advance of Quilt, a length from whom succeeded The Victim, eight lengths in front of Landseer and Weathercock. Time, 6 minutes 7 seconds.

Railway Handicap, a sweepstakes of 5 sovs. each, with 200 added; for three-year-olds and upwards. Second horse to receive 40 and third 20 sovs. out of the stake. Winner of any handicap after declaration of weights, value under 100 sovs., to carry 5lb. extra, of 100 sovs. or upwards, 7lb. extra—6 furlongs.

Betting: 3 to 1 each v. Plutarch and Teuton, 6 to 1 each v. The Charmer and Epicurean, 7 to 1 each v. Tourbillon and Lord John, 15 to 20 to 1 v. others.

The flag went down to what appeared to be a good start, Plutarch, in the centre, getting off as well as most; while Mantilla, Tourbillon, Epicurean, and Lord John showed most prominently of others. Making a great run, Lord John showed the way over the tan, closely pressed by Tourbillon, Plutarch, and Epicurean, while The Charmer was making great headway on the outside; and Chetwynd also held a dangerous position. Lord John showed clear at the distance, but was soon afterwards headed by Tourbillon; and, Huxley sitting down on Plutarch, a pretty race took place. When about 100 yards from home, Plutarch had almost got on terms with the two leaders, but then Tourbillon shot to the front, and holding his own won all out by three-quarters of a length from Plutarch, who beat Lord John for second place, after a great race. Epicurean, who was coming very fast, was scarcely a length away fourth, The Charmer on the outside fifth, then followed Wyvis, Chetwynd, Mantilla, Teuton, Land 'O, Blue Bell, Whitworth, The Gift, and Firelock, in that order. Time, 1 minute 16 seconds.

The Kensington Stakes, a sweepstakes of 10 sovs. each, 2 ft., with 300 added, for two-year-olds—colts, 8st. 5lb.; fillies and geldings, 8st.; the winner to be sold for £300; no selling allowance; winner to be exempt from penalties at V. R. C. meetings—5 furlongs.

Betting: 7 to 4 v. Little Norman, 3 to 1 v. Pippo, 4 to 1 v. Lady Agnes, 7 to 1 v. Britomarte, 10 to 20 to 1 v. others.

Britomarte was the first to move, with Epi and Pippo in close attendance; but when they settled down to race Little Norman went to the front with a brilliant run, and, with Pippo and Lady Agnes in close waiting, led across the tan with the fast tiring Epi next. Little Norman drew further away at every stride, but just at the distance Pippo raced up to him, and soon disposing of him, shot to the front, and, Little Norman fading out of it, Lady Agnes and Britomarte, settled down to chase Mr. White's colt; but he never gave them a chance, and won easily by nearly two lengths. Britomarte was about a length and a-half away, third, and was followed by Little Norman, Voltigeur, Treason, Epi, and Hartlands. Time, 1 minute 4¼ seconds.

Betting: 4 to 1 v. Chicago, 6 to 1 v. Whakawai, 7 to 1 v. Mentor, 9 to 1 v. Tradition, 10 to 1 v. Carlyon, 12 to 1 v. Bravo, 18 to 1 v. Cyclops, 20 to 1 each v. The Yeoman, The Australian Peer, and Malua: 30 to 100 to 1 v. others.

A trifling delay took place before the flag flashed down to an excellent start, and the gigantic Tradition and Bravo jumped off on their all-important journey with a slight advantage of Mentor, after whom could be seen the brilliant colours of Malua, with Ensign, Whakawai, Spade Guinea, and Newmaster next. Malua, despite his big weight, at once began to set them a task, and making the pace very solid, led Mentor and Spade Guinea by half a length on to the course proper, while almost on terms came Newmaster, Bravo, and Melos. Suddenly Spade Guinea made a great run, and took command at the distance, where Melos, Newmaster, Bravo, Mentor, and Tradition were her immediate followers, with scarcely a half length between them. Spade Guinea and Melos conducted Newmaster, Bravo, Mentor, Tradition, and Touchstone past the stand; and then, hardly a length off, came The Australian Peer, Dick Swiveller, Chicago, and Whakawai, in a great heap, followed by Arsenal and The Yeoman, while the rear guard consisted of Aristocrat, E. D., Phaon, Recall, and Ben Bolt. They had hardly passed the post when Spade Guinea broke her shoulder and retired, leaving Melos to show the way round the turn by a length, with Malua, Mentor, Newmaster, Bravo, Cyclops, Whakawai, The Yeoman, and Touchstone in close attendance, and after them were The Australian Peer, Tradition, Dick Swiveller, and Arsenal. Malua, who had been following Melos, headed him as they raced along the Saltwater River, and led to the bridge by a length, Melos, Mentor, Dick Swiveller, Whakawai, Bravo, and the Australian Peer following in close order, with the others so closely packed as to be impossible to separate. Cyclops then made a great run, and, getting to the front, conducted them along the back of the course by three lengths, while Whakawai went up second, and Malua became suddenly buried in the ruck, at the head of which were Ensign, Melos, Mentor, Bravo, The Australian Peer, and Tradition, closely followed by The Yeoman and Chicago, and the latter appeared to be thus early in difficulties. Cyclops drew away at a wonderful pace, and when passing the abattoirs loud cries were raised that they would never catch him; but when he had established a lead of fully four lengths, Whakawai, with Bravo and Mentor in his wake, set sail after him. The quartette left a gap between them and The Australian Peer, Ensign, Chicago, and Tradition, who followed them. The pace had now become terrific, and Melos, Ensign, and Dick Swiveller melted out of the battle, while The Australian Peer and The Yeoman began to take up dangerous positions. Cyclops held his own to the half-mile post, where Whakawai dashed at him, and then retired beaten after a half-hearted effort to cut down the son of St. Albans. The next to essay the task was Bravo, who had The Yeoman and the fast-tiring Whakawai at his girths, and a length from the first flight came Mentor, The Australian Peer, and Tradition; but the weight had told on The Australian Peer, and as they made the turn for home the diamond-snake-like jacket of Bravo was carried to the front, when a great roar went up that he had his field in trouble; but The Yeoman and Mentor were hard upon him, and on the outside the mighty Tradition was cutting down his horses one by one, and rapidly drawing towards the leaders. Cyclops reeled at the distance, and Bravo cleared away, but he, too, was worn to a standstill, and Cyclops giving place to The Yeoman, the latter just got his head in front. But on the outside there still kept coming that giant racehorse, Tradition, while The Australian Peer, after one gallant struggle, left the battle to the first flight, and Mentor coming between Bravo and Tradition, got on terms with the son of Grand Flaneur when 200 yards from home. The whip then went up on Bravo, and he melted away, leaving Mentor to shine out as the Cup winner, with Tradition catching him at every stride. Tradition's want of condition told upon him at the last, and rolling in his stride, his brilliant effort failed to be sustained, and Mentor won the Cup by a length and a half. The Yeoman, who ran a great horse throughout, was a length from Tradition, and then came Cyclops, Whakawai, Bravo, Chicago, The Australian Peer, Carlyon, Recall, Malua, Arsenal, and Melos; while the last lot was composed of Touchstone, Dick Swiveller, Ben Bolt, Aristocrat, Maggie, and Phaon. Ensign broke his fetlock, and was pulled up before reaching the post. Time, 3 minutes 30½ seconds.

Betting: 6 to 4 v. Rudolph, 4 to 1 v. Savernak, 5 to 1 each v. Poet and Rokeby, 10 to 25 to 1 v. others.

A very good start sent Savernak away with a slight advantage of Richelieu, and with the favourite in waiting the pair led over the tan, and after the first three came Aura and Poet, with Vera running unkindly. Richelieu led Savernak by half a length to the half distance; but Hales was only biding his time on Rudolph, and loosening his head when necessary, the son of Martini-Henry sailed to the front and won without an effort by two lengths from Richelieu, who was a length in front of Savernak. Then followed Adventurous, Linburn, and Aura, while St. Ives and The King were last. Time, 1 minute 4 seconds.

Betting: 5 to 4 v. Pakeha, 5 to 2 v. Plutarch, 6 to 1 v. Dufferin, 10 to 20 to 1 v. others.

Lady Marion made the running, attended by Bombardier, Plutarch, and Pakeha, to the distance, where she melted away in favour of Plutarch and Pakeha, and the latter, going to the front shortly after passing the distance, beat Plutarch by a length and a-half. Loyalist was three lengths off third, and then came Dufferin, Lady Marion, Aldivalloch, Straight Shot, Morok, Honeydew, Forest Queen, and Bombardier. Time, 1 minute 42½ seconds.

FIRE AT DARLING HARBOUR.

Shortly after 1 o'clock this morning a fire was discovered on the premises of Messrs. Parsons Brothers, Harbour-street, Darling Harbour. An alarm was at once raised, and Constable Fullerton gave the Metropolitan Fire Brigade the call. A corps of the brigade were soon at the scene, as were also the Standard Brewery and the Paddington Brewery Brigades. The fire raged for some time, but the vigorous exertions of the firemen succeeded in effecting the extinction of the fire in about an hour from the time the men commenced operations. The kiln on the ground floor and the drying-room on the first floor were wrecked. On the premises was a considerable quantity of pearl-barley, which was destroyed. The cause of the fire is assumed to be overheating. The total amount of the damage is not known. The property is insured.

WINDOWS.

(From the Standard.)

What is a window? The answer depends very much on the age of the world to which the question is intended to apply. A window may be a mere aperture in a wall, or, at best, an opening covered with lattice-work—such as still exists in Oriental countries. Five hundred years before the building of Rome "the mother of Sisera looked out at a window, and cried through the lattice." Probably a portion of the lattice was made to open by means of hinges or a slide, so as to afford an unrestricted view. The lattice was the parent of the domestic window, such as characterises modern civilisation, while the slit in the wall seems to have been the forerunner of the stately windows which ultimately adorned the ecclesiastical edifices of the Christian era. Some of the rustic windows at the present day are very much like a glazed lattice. Small diamond panes are set in lead, and the greater portion of the window is fixed, while one part opens horizontally on a hinge. Sashes and sash-lines, with counter-weights, to allow of an easy vertical motion, are refinements connected with a more advanced stage. In Gothic architecture the earliest windows were extremely small, terminating in a head of semi-circular form. Usually there was but a single light, except in belfry towers. With the introduction of the pointed style of architecture, a marked change took place. The windows became elongated to a surprising extent, surmounted by a lancet head. The next step was to perforate the space between the summits of two lancet-headed lights, and the fundamental principle of the ornamented window was obtained. The effect on the interior of the churches and other buildings is described as substituting "a blaze of light" for masses of gloom. The full-blown Gothic window, with its many mullions and delicate tracery, took the place of the contracted apertures which formerly prevailed. Improvements in the manufacture of glass facilitated the change, and the introduction of the glazed window has exercised a marked influence on modern architecture. It is singular that the window, as we now know it, has followed on at so late a period after the invention of glass. This vitreous compound was little better than a plaything for ages. The ancient Egyptians could make glass, but they never glazed a window. They could make bottles and various ornamental articles composed of coloured glass. They could even paint on glass, yet they seem to have missed altogether the idea of producing a clear, light-transmitting sheet, such as would exclude the weather and the dust, and yet admit the cheerful light of day.

An almost extravagant antiquity has been ascribed to the practice of glass-making among the Egyptians. Doubtless it was from the banks of the Nile that this useful art ultimately extended itself to other regions, until at last the centre of the industry became shifted to Rome, where again it suffered deterioration under the pressure of German and Hunnish barbarism. In the reign of Nero, the Roman mansions possessed windows which appear to have corresponded very closely to those constructed in England in the seventeenth century. But the window glass of the Imperial city was far inferior in quality to that which is now in common use. It was uneven in surface, and full of bubbles, so that objects seen through it must have been considerably distorted. The same is to be said of the glass in the windows of Pompeii. Pliny's villa had glazed windows, some of which reached to the floor; but these were possibly made of talc, which could be obtained in sheets as much as five feet in length. Still, it is evident that real glass was also in use for this purpose, and to this extent a window was produced within the meaning of the term now employed. It is curious that England is mainly indebted to an archbishop and an abbot for the introduction of the glass window. At the commencement of the seventh century this country had no "glass-makers." At that period the windows of private dwellings, as well as of churches, were filled with linen cloth, or with wooden lattices. In the latter part of the century, Wilfred, when Archbishop of York, proceeded to effect extensive repairs in the Cathedral, at that time in a ruinous state, and he is described as having "put glass into the windows," a provision previously unknown. Possibly he derived aid from his friend and contemporary Benedict Biscop, abbot of Wearmouth, who about the year 674 brought glass manufacturers over from France to glaze the windows of his monastery and church. The Venerable Bede states that up to that time the making of glass was unknown in England. He also asserts that these French artisans not only executed the work assigned to them by Benedict, but gave instructions to the English "in the art of making glass for windows, lamps, and other uses." Five hundred years after the era of Biscop and Wilfred, windows of glass existed in English houses; but despite all that had been done to naturalise this industry the glass was still imported from the Continent. Five hundred years yet later on we hear of Venetian artists at Lambeth, under the patronage of Villiers, Duke of Buckingham, engaged in making "glass plate" for coach windows and mirrors. This brings us down to 1673. A century more finds the French making great progress in the production of large plates, in which they soon met with formidable rivals on this side the Channel. The manufacture of glass of some kind was fairly established in England more than a hundred years before the Venetian artists produced "glass-plate" at Lambeth, this early manufacture being located at Crutched Friars and the Savoy. But plate glass was the great achievement so far as windows were concerned, and to the perfecting of this branch we owe important practical results affecting our everyday existence.

A waggish savant once defined a window as "an orifice in an edifice for the transmission of lenticular rays." This is near enough to the mark as things now are, but would not apply to the ancient apertures, if we are to give any weight to the word "lenticular." Let the definition be what it may, the window of our own era sustains an important part in our social and commercial life. To the occupants of a dwelling there is the pleasure of looking out of a window; and to those who stroll along the street—especially the members of the fair sex—there is the delight of looking in. The art of "window-dressing" is highly esteemed in those trades which seek to attract the passer-by into the expenditure of cash on articles of taste or dress. The seductive influence of the shop-window is responsible for a certain amount of extravagance, as well as for the promotion of trade in general. The perfection to which this process is brought is exemplified by the array of beautiful and costly goods to be witnessed in Regent-street, Bond-street, Ludgate Hill, and Cheapside. Here and there we see an affectation of style, in the construction of windows, after an antiquated type, such as existed in the days of Old London. But such designs are only applicable to trades of a special character, or where the wares are severely æsthetic. Splendour and display are the stimulants mainly relied upon, and plate-glass lends itself readily to the skill of the glazier in producing those fascinating shop fronts, which make the streets of our large towns equivalent to a perpetual exhibition of industry and art. But windows meet us at every turn. The old burden of the window tax and the duty on glass have, happily, been removed. Those miserable imposts—especially the former—shrouded many houses in gloom which otherwise would have been flooded with light. It is curious that the window tax was abolished in 1851, the year of the Great Exhibition in Hyde Park, when the world was charmed with a gigantic structure which might be described as "all window." The tendency to let in the light is very marked in the present day. Every warehouse bears witness to it, and every workshop. Glass is largely superseding brickwork, and it is even asserted that the fragile fronts thus given to commercial structures in London, especially in the city, provide for the wider and more rapid extension of fire. In ordinary dwellings windows and window panes alike grow in size. The bay window has superseded the ungainly bow window, with its bulging and unsightly curve. Even the attic window has put on an air of elegance, and throughout the abodes of the people the more extensive use of glass for window purposes has made home a brighter and a healthier place than it was wont to be a hundred years ago. The people are the better for it both physically and morally.

NOTES EXPLANATORY OF MAP.

In the list of stations, the column headed W.T. gives the state of the weather at 9 a.m., b standing for blue sky; c, detached clouds; d, drizzling rain; f, fog; g, gloomy; h, hazy; m, misty; n, frosty; o, overcast; p, passing showers; r, rain; s, snow; t, thunder; u threatening. The next column, M'x., gives the maximum temperature for previous 24 hours. M'n. the corresponding minimum temperature; R'n. the rain for the previous 24 hours. The symbols used in the map are explained on the margin. At each station the wind symbol points to the direction in which the wind is blowing, is in fact an arrow flying with the wind. A clear circle with it means fine weather, a circle with bar, cloudy weather and a black spot, raining. Next to this symbol are placed figures denoting the number of miles the wind is moving per hour. Next, a symbol showing the state of the sea; and lastly, figures denoting the shade temperature at 9 a.m. The barometer curve shows the state of barometers round the coast from Perth to Cooktown:—Pt. Perth; Ay. Albany; Ea. Eucla; CB. Cape Borda; A. Adelaide; Ro. Robe; P. Portland; M. Melbourne; WP. Wilson's Promontory; Go. Gabo; E. Eden; Ma. Moreya; CG. Jervois Bay; WG. Woollongong; S. Sydney; N. Newcastle; PM. Port Macquarie; C. Clarence River; B. Brisbane; R. Rockhampton; Ct. Cooktown. Inland, the state of barometer is given in figures at Albury, Deniliquin, Wentworth, Menindie, Bourke, and Alice Springs. The barometer curve enables one at a glance to trace the depressions, beginning with Western Australia, and passing along eastwards northerly winds preceding them, and southerly following.

The rainfall on Sundays and holidays, when the map is not published, is in all cases included in the quantities shown by the next following map.

FOR GENERAL USE IN PLACE OF SUGAR. SACCHARIN.
One Pound equals about 280lb. of Cane Sugar.
One of the chief uses of SACCHARIN will be in the enrichment of the diet of those persons who are forbidden the use of sugar, and who will now be able to enjoy a sweet flavouring in the various articles of diet formerly denied them. It is particularly applicable to those suffering from diabetes, gout, rheumatism, dyspepsia, obesity, and liver complaints, or any form of disease where the use of sugar is objectionable. It cannot "create acidity," as sugar often does, since it is non-fermenting and antiseptic—characteristics of very great importance.

Houses and Land for Sale.

FOR PRIVATE SALE.

1280 ACRES OF LAND, DWELLING-HOUSE, ORCHARDS, &c., IN CAIRNS, NORTH QUEENSLAND about two miles from Terminus of Cairns-Herberton Railway.

A F. J. DRAPER, Auctioneer, Cairns, has been favoured with instructions to sell by Private Sale,

All that beautiful Estate, known as BALACLAVA, comprising 1280 acres of rich arable land, commencing about two miles from Cairns, on the Mulgrave, Russell, Goldsbrough and Herberton Main Roads.

From a scenic point of view the property under offer is simply a Paradise.

Four hundred acres of the Estate comprise a range of low-lying hills or slopes, which offer special inducement for Building purposes.

One hundred acres of the property are leased to Chinese Agriculturists, and this area at the present time is in a perfect state of cultivation.

Fifteen acres of the Estate are under Bananas, and one thousand fruit trees of every conceivable variety are now well advanced in growth. The trees are principally of the Orange family.

A well and substantially-built chamferboard Dwelling-house, fitted with every convenience, and erected at a cost of £500, is beautifully situated on a commanding position immediately fronting

A 40-ACRE HORSE PADDOCK.

This paddock, which is securely fenced is thoroughly cleared and stumped, and is under couch grass, the whole presenting the appearance of an immense Croquet Lawn. The present occupant is the Manager of the Bank of North Queensland, under lease to expire November 10, 1889.

The property is Permanently Watered by four (4) running streams. Water for the garden and domestic use is conveyed from the

by a race, which continually discharges its sylvan treasure within a few yards of the house.

The property is bounded by the well-known Walkerville and Hap Wah Estates.

Walkerville Estate four years ago was sold by public auction, and averaged £34 an acre.

Hap Wah Estate, in every way inferior to the property now offered, was purchased three years ago for £15,000 cash, or at the rate of £13 per acre.

CAPITALISTS, SPECULATORS, and the INVESTING PUBLIC GENERALLY are reminded by the auctioneer that all the Government land in Cairns or its immediate neighbourhood has been sold. The purchase of this magnificent estate, situate as it is within 2 miles of Cairns—the future City of the North—must prove a genuine and profitable speculation. No one doubts that Cairns, with its wealth of natural advantages, its railway, harbour, and prolific natural resources, will, in the course of a very few years, be a large flourishing seaport. High and dry land within two miles of the port must therefore of a certainty become very valuable.

Remember.
The Estate is only Two Miles from Cairns,
It comprises 1280 acres,

Is well watered,
is partly under cultivation.

It is a perfect Northern Paradise,
It is healthy to a degree,

Beautifully situated,
Thoroughly high and dry.

For subdivision purposes the estate cannot be equalled. It is certainly the future suburb of Cairns, for nowhere else can such lovely sites be obtained. The auctioneer has no hesitation in saying that in the hands of a syndicate or company the land would readily sell at high figures, and turn out to be a most payable speculation.

Further particulars and details to be obtained from
A. J. DRAPER, Auctioneer, Cairns.

The following brief facts may mean the commencement of the foundation of a Fortune.

All the main traffic between Sydney and Melbourne passes through this district.

The limpid waters of the George's River preclude all fear of the monster Drought.

The Business Frontages must in a very short time go up five hundred per cent.

The Main Streets will be busy with Markets, Stores, and places of Business.

Investors, Builders, and those who wish to make money out of small investments quickly, as well as those who wish to reside in a picturesque spot, can find no better opportunity.

Every facility for Boating, Bathing, and Fishing Picnics, and all within a short run of the metropolis, away from the turmoil of city life, but commanding all the facilities of civilisation.

The most distant allotment is within seven minutes' walk of the Railway Station.

There is no question but that this Estate will be covered with houses very shortly, and would have been years ago had it been open to the public.

There is no waiting for years for a railway to be built, and population to increase. Shops will be let as soon as they are erected.

Remember that this land is near the station and that the surrounding property has nearly all been sold, and vineyards, orchards, and market gardens for which this land is so noted are springing up on every side.

Special facilities are offered for inspection and plans are now ready, so that intending purchasers may carefully study the advantages of the various locations.

The auctioneers' advice is for you to inspect all other properties advertised, but do not buy until you have seen LIVERPOOL EAST.

Sales are being made daily, but it is intended to hold an auction sale of the unsold portion at an early date; but the reserve price will exceed that for which the land can now be bought.

Those who study their own and children's welfare will at once inspect and secure some of these

ARE YOU FOR THE HATS!—JUMP IN! ARE YOU FOR THE BOOTS!—JUMP IN! ARE YOU FOR THE CARPETS! JUMP IN!

You will find the travelling pleasant, the speed convenient, and the accommodation good.

Soon we shall be able to invite you to go further, higher up, in fact; at present you can't do better than take a trip as far as

OUR NEW CARPET ROOM,
Which is on the third floor of the New Buildings in George-street. Entrance through the Clothing Shop.

This new LIFT or ELEVATOR of ours is a perfect piece of machinery, constructed with every regard to comfort, efficiency, and safety; of ample size for every possible requirement, and most tastefully upholstered and decorated.

THE PASSENGER CAR
is in itself a work of art, and an example of how solidity of construction and perfection of arrangement may be combined with the most ELABORATE ARTISTIC DECORATION.

A passenger therein, of an imaginative temperament, would not find it difficult to conjure up all kinds of strange conceits and fanciful visions. As you ascend,
THE SOFT ELECTRIC LIGHT
throws a celestial radiance on all within its influence, and the effect is heightened by a pretty array of the most beautiful works of the artificial florist, arranged in careless elegance at the back of the car. Earthly matters are almost forgotten in the delicious beauty of the surroundings, and one of the fair sex travelling upwards for pretty little beaded Shoes for her tiny tootsies, might well forget all about mundane requirements in the thought that she was a saint journeying on wings of light to

THE BURRABOGIE ESTATE.

HILL, CLARK, and CO. (with Powers, Rutherford, and Co., of Melbourne) have received instructions from the Proprietor, Fitz-William Wentworth, Esq., to offer for sale by public auction, at Scott's Hotel, Melbourne, on THURSDAY, 13th December, 1888, at 3 O'CLOCK p.m., THAT MAGNIFICENT PASTORAL PROPERTY, BURRABOGIE, situated in the Murrumbidgee District of New South Wales.

This splendid property consists of 250,000 acres of purchased Land
47,616 ditto leasehold area
25,000 ditto resumed ditto, together with
157,108 mixed sheep (more or less) of the following ages and sexes:—

WETHERS.	EWES.
33,066 wethers, Weinteriga and Capaulin bred	7,586 ewes, 6 years
7,868 ditto, Nundoro bred	6,180 ditto, 5 ditto
13,279 ditto, 4-tooth station bred	13,863 ditto, 4 ditto

1,100 rams	1,550 first studs
	1,114 second ditto.
102,235	54,873

Also, 90 head cattle, and 120 horses.

The name of BURRABOGIE, which is recognised as that of one of the most magnificent properties in Australia, should be alone sufficient to guarantee purchasers desiring to invest large amounts of capital in a most paying security.

The country is not to be surpassed for wool-growing and fattening stock.

The BURRABOGIE SHEEP are equal to any in the colony, the station-bred wethers this year cutting over nine pounds of fleece wool; and the fat sheep always command the highest prices in either Sydney or Melbourne markets.

Besides its excellence for wool-growing and fattening, the country is admirably adapted and peculiarly situated for agriculture, as it can be easily irrigated by the waters of the Murrumbidgee, to which it has 22 miles frontage, an irrigation plant being now in use.

The IMPROVEMENTS are most complete. In fact, nothing has been left undone, nor has expense been spared to have everything substantial and of the most useful nature, and in thorough working order.

In offering this choice Property, the AUCTIONEERS confidently invite inspection, and draw the attention of intending purchasers, capitalists, and others to the fact that it is most favourably situated for either the Sydney or Melbourne markets, being only 22 miles from Hay, 15 miles from Carrathool, and 6 miles from [illegible] Railway Stations.
